This composition was bnwifely made, as moste men indged : for every man of any wife= dome might ealily coniedure, that king Edward having so long day to make his provision, would 20 dwelling places appoynted them in the same, come in support of them within the Castell, and that so strongly, as would be pard for the Scots torelist him.

King Robert himselfe also was loze offended theigh with his brother for his follie thewed in this bebiomer halfe, but pet he would not goe aboute to breake the concuant accorded, for doubt to lofe his brother, whose ande he might not well want.

In the meane time king Edwarde sent forth mellengers with letters, not onely buto all hys 30 subjects, but also buto all his confederates and allves, to have men of warre taken by and retay= ned to ferue him in his warres against the Scots which he intended to follow to the otter destructi= on of the whole nation.

There came therefore in hope of spoyle, not onely such as were appointed by commissioners of the musters, but also a greate number of other that offered themselves of their owne accorde to line upon at home, and trusted to amend the matfer by some and fortune in the warres abrode.

The Countreps out of the which it is repoz= ted by the Scottish writers, that such ayde came to the Englishe men, were thele, pollande, Zeland, Brabant, Flanders, Picardie, Boloignois, Calcoigne, Pozmandie, Buian, and Burdelois, for all these at that time were either subject to the Bing of Englande, oz elle in confederate league with him.

There were also many Scottes that were Englishe by denotion, and ayded king Edward at this tome.

The Abbot of Inchechaffray did celebrate before the king that day, and ministred buts him and other of the Pobles the communion, other Priestes being appoprited to minister the same onto the relidue of the armie.

After this, when feruice was ended, the king called the people to his standart, and first declared unto them from poynt to poynt how necessas ticit was for them to thewe their wonted manhood, considering that such an huge multitude of people was brought thither agaynste them by king Cowarde, not of one Pation of Dominion, but of fundrie languages and parties, afwel fubiedes as alves to the English men, with his purpole otterly to extinguish the Scottish name and memorie, and to plant themselves in their states and rowmeths, as in possessions betterly boyders of all the auncient and former inhabitants.

To encrease the fierce Comacks of the Scote till men agapult the enimies, he recounted buto them what hee heard by credible report touching the menacing wordes and infolent brace of the against the united inuaders of they? This Marietie was gotten by king Robert on the Earle of War his lifter, his first wife, and was marred by the aduice of his Pobles, buto Walter great Steward of Scotlande.

Allo K. Robert, for that his first wife aforelaid was deceased, maried shortly after Elizabeth the daughter of the Earle of Allter, on whom he got The issue of a come named David, and two daughters, the one named Margaret, and the other Maulde.

The firste was marged to the Carle of Su- 10 therlande, and bare him a fonne nanco John.

The leconde departed this worlde in hir infancie.

After the marpage colemnised betwirt hys daughter Mariorie, and the forelande Walter Steward, King Robert went through all the boundes of his Realme, and did not onely confirme the auncient lyberties and priviledges of the Burrowes and townes in al places where he tame, but also augmented the same, and graun- 20 iourney of his brother, in purpole to have supported bute diverte alwel townes as baronics, fundie newe prerogatives and franchiles, as maye appeare by his charters made but o them of the fame, specially to the townes of Perth, Dundee, and Aberdene.

In the yeare following, whiche was in the peace 1315, the Princes of Arclande oppressed (as they twke it) with long and inlufterable tyrannie of the English men, and trusting by suppost of Scottes to recover their libertie, now after 30 The Lordes of so notable an overthrows of the whole Englishe Irelandere - puissance, sent Ambailavogs onto king Robert. requiring that it might please him to sende hys brother Edwarde Bruce, to recepue the crowne and government of they? This requelt being graunted, Cowarde prepared to take that journey in hande, and so with a small power of scottist men transporting o= ner into Irelande, and forning with an army of fuch as were readie to affift him there, he toke the 40 the governoz haning likewife gatheteban army, town of Allter, and fine a great number of English men which were found in the same.

Then afterwardes, by the generall consent of Edward Bruce all the estates of Frelande. Cowarde Bzuce was proclaymed king of that Realme, and certaine of the Irith Pobilitie lent Amballavors unto the Pope, to fewe for a ratification of they? aff and moceedings, for the furetic and weale of they? Countrey, lithe they were not able longer to Donne.

Thele Amballadours, through their earnest dilicence, got such favour in they? sute, that the 19 ove fundrie tymes charged the English men to anopoe out of Irelande, howbeit they feemed to men palle litle passe little of his commaundements in that behalfe, for they dayly fought how to make themfelues strong in that part, least they shoulde lose the pollellion of that Countrey, whiche they? enimics were aboute to get forth of their handes.

In the latter ende of his dayes, he was arienough pered with a lepsofie, which thus finally made an ende of him, in the rrifficence of hys raign, being one of the most valiant princes kno= wen in any part of the whole worlde in those bis payes, having felt in his time the force of eyther 50 fortunctfor in the beginning of his raigne, furhe flornes of aducelitie furrounded him on ech fide, that if his constant manhade had not beene the areater, it might have brought human dispapee of all recourrie: for belides lundire disconsitures. which he recevued at the handes of the enimics, with loffe of all his beetheen (his beother Edward only excepted) the most part of all the Lozdes of his fame therfore did fpread hugely, not onely The firm amogst his own people, but also amongst stran- king Ro gers, infomuch as his due praise was not wanting, no not even amonast and in the middest of his verie enimics.

For (as it is layde) on a tyme it chaunced that king Coward the thirde, litting at a banket mongh amongest his Pobles, fell in talke with them of enimes. taynes, as had excelled in knowledge in behalf.

At length after much reasoning to and fro. he A questi propounded this question to the king of Heralds, poned of English that as then flood by, comaunding him to beclare raide by tohich were the three most worthie and valiant Edwards captains that he had knowne in all his dayes.

The Herald aduiting with himself of this matter, stayed a space, in which means while all the covanic were quict, longing to heare his answere as was able belt to give lentence in such a matter, and againe, for that many of them thought he woulde have numbed some of those that were there present, amongest those three. But the Hes rald did not onely know all the noble men within the realme of England, but allo al fuch strangers as had in any wife excelled in martiall prowes, having all their actes and valiant doings in fresh memorie, and therebyon boldly bitered his mind 40 as followeth:

The first, most worthie and valiant chieftain The Her (layo he) that hath lined in thefe our dayes, was question Benrie the Emperoz, for be luboued three kings and three realmes, and mainterned his imperial cltate with profectous felicitie to his lines ende.

At length, at the Petalors requelt; the King commannoed commanused them to be styll: the Parold then s began againe thus: I beiecke youre highnesse, fard be if I have oughte offended, to take my mortes in good part : for I have bene euer of this comion, that the trouth flould in enery case bee pitered, received and allowed in your graces pie= fence, namely where your highnesse commaun= deti any man to declare the fame.

to confider, that if a man must needes bee van= authed, it is lesse dishonoure to bee vanauisted of him that is knowne for a right valiant perfonage, than of him that is but a coward.

Moreover, to thew plannly buto your grace. how much I esteeme the valiancie of king Robert whom I perceive some here may not abide to have numbeed with the.ij. former most vali= ant capitains) if the trouth mighte appeare, I fore them both: for the valiannt actes atchiened by Henry the Emperour may be ascribed rather to the wisedom of his counselloss, than to his own valiantnelle and paudencie: but contrarply Bing Robert being confined out of his coutrep. lidenia and destitute of frendes and all conuenable apoe, recoursed the realine of Scotlande, by his fin= gular manhod out of the handes of your noble father, and established it with suche tranquillitie that he appeared moze terrible to his enimies of 30 Englande, than ever they havde bin afoze to hys sublects of Scotland.

> These of the semblable wordes bettered by the Deraulde, were well allowed of the kying, and stopped the mouthes of them that toke the matter so straungely at the first.

But now to return to the purpole, King Roberte a little before the tyme of his death, called together into the chamber where he-lap, the chiefell precess of his realine, and there in precence of 40 them all, committed onto them the government of his some Dauid, a child as then not pall feum yeares of age.

He also aduited them of sundry things touthing the rule of the Realme after his deceale, whiche he percepued was at hand.

Ind first he counselled them that in no wyle 5. they flould at any tyme make an absolute lozd ouer the Iles, bycaule the people of the same are of nature busteofast, & some seduced & bzoughte which beeing once fallen, they are not easily reduced to their due obedience againe, by reason there countreys are of fuche frength, that they can not be approched but by sea, as environned with the faine.

Secondarily, bee aduited them never to appoint any lette battaple with the Englishmen, not to icopards the realms byon the chaunce of one fielde, but rather to refift and keepe them off from endomaging their countrey, by often fkirmilling and cutting them off at Araits and placcs of aduauntage, to the intent that if Scottes bediscomfited, they mave yet have some power referued to make new reliftance.

Thirdly, he forbad them in any wife to make any long peace with Englande, for naturally This one thing therefore, I thall deligge you 10 men ware dull and Couthfull by long refte and quietnesse, so that after long peace, through lack of ble and exercise of armes, men are not able to fustaine any great vaines or travaile.

Mozeover, he alledged, how the Englishmen woulde continue in peace no longer than there wanted opoztunitie and convenient occasion for them to attempt the warres, and therfore he ind= ged it best, that the Scottes Moulde neuer con= clude any perpetuall peace with them, not take durft be bold to preferre him with god cause be- 20 any truce longer than for three or foure yeares at the moste.

> De willed them farther to confider one thing, that when there appeared least occasion of war= res with England, then they quant to be moste circumspecte, in adventure their enimies thould come at bowares, and fonde them boppouided, for tymely reliciance.

Herconto her deliced them, that after his de- His defire to cealle, they woulde choic some one of the moste have his harte mosthie capitaines within the whole realme to borne to the beare his peart buto Hierusalem, and there to see holy sepulchre it buried within the temple, before the holy Sepulchee of our Lozde.

for if he had not bin for a long space byndered by begent businesse of warres at home, and lastly prevented by death, he had homed to have passed with an army into the holy lande, in defence of the chillian faith, againste the Turks and Saralins.

It chaunced at the lame tyme, that ar John Strivelyng capitanne of the llege, with a great parte of the armie, went onto Donfermling for Deuotion lake, to billte the Maine of Saint Margaret, sometyme Queene of Scotlande.

Whereof Blane Mepount then capitagne of the Castell, hauping binderstanding, about nidnight prevared three boates, and taking certain fouldiours with hym, rowed fourth to the heade of the damme of water, and there with such en- 20 bnto Blalgow, and perceiuing there was little gines as he had denyled for the purpole, allayed to boare thorough and make a hole in the banke or rampier that kepte by the water, which when they had brought to palle, they returned quickely agapue to the castell.

The water having once gotten an issue, within a whyle ware the hole so large, that entryng with moze violence, it finally brake bowne the that it bare downe all afore it, drowning withe 30 lyoll, and leafed into his handes all thek landes in Scale banke, & rulled forth with fuch an huge Areani, The bastiles bastile and tentes of them that lay at siege there, them that laye and carryed the same with men and all downe at tiege drow- into the deepe lea, they were lo lodenly taken, ere they could make any thift to escape.

Plane Acpount, whi the water was fallen to the olde marke, issued forth of the castel, and setting byon those that had escaped the daunger of the water, flew part of them, and put the remi nant to flyght.

John Strivelyng hearing the milchiefe that had havned to his folks, returned to the liege, and made a vowe never to departe from thence, til he had taken the callel, and flayn al them within it.

But vet after he had lapne there a long tome. and lawe it was not pollible to wome that fortreffe, he was confirment to reple his flege, and to goe his wayes, after he had lolt therat no imal number of his people. This liege of Loche Lea to upn chanced in the Lent lealon in the pere. 1935.

In the yeare following, King Coward mepared an armie both by fea and land to enter into Scoflande.

Amongest other, Thomas Bruce Earle of Carryke, and William Canthere, with a num= ber of the commons came buto hom.

About the same tyme, the Earle of Murray returned forth of Fraunce, and landed at Donbyton, where he was most toyfully recepued by tice land Robert Steward.

Shortlye after the lapd, Stewarde and the larde Carle, hauing with them a greate power of their frendes and allies, came into Cloveldale, 39. Ranfrew, Kyle, Cunyngham, and Apze, which together with Ros and Murray, they reduced to the obeylance of king Dauid. The Earle of Hurrape also, to reuenge the infuries done by the Carle of Athole, wente buto Abyrden, and there learning where hee folourned, made thither with all specde: but the Carle of Athole unders standing howe all the countrey toke parte with uchenhin- his advertaries, fled into the mountains, where the moun- her lusteyned his lyfe wyth hearbes and rotes 40 Earle of Athole, who as then beeying solicited. for a tyme, and durite not come forth to thewe bis bead.

It length when he sawe no wave to escape, he came forth and in most humble worle submit. ted himselfe to the logoes that desended the parte of king Danid.

They recepuing him oppon his lubmillion, fware him to be true buto king Dauid, and er= hortyng him to becas diligente in reconcilyng 50 the people buto king Danid, as he hadde ben afore to subocine them to the obedience of the Ballpoll, they suffred him to departe:

The Historie of Scotlande.

The King of Englande fore moned for the reath of his brother, came oner with all focede in= to France with a mighty holf, and had with him Tames the Scottiffe King, oz rather Prince of Scotland, for all this while the Scottes reputed him not as King, for p he was not as yet crow= hands, into the which as before ve have hearde, he chaunced to fall by his fathers life time.

The cause why King Henry did take thys Fames over with him at & present into Fraunce was, for that he hoped by his meanes to procure all the Scrottishmen that were in service with the Dolphin to fozsake him, and to returne home into their owne countrey:but when he had bzoken thus matter buto the faide James, and pro= into Scotlande highly rewarded with greate rithes. James aunswered herebuto, that hee mar= uelled much, why he did not confider how he had no auctoritic ouer the Scottes to long as he was is don in captinitie, and as yet had not recepted the Crowne, but (fayeth he) if it were so that I might be let at libertie & had recepued & Crowne according to the accustomed manner, together with the other and homages of my lubicates, I rould the in thys matter do, as should be thought 40 to frande with reason, but in the meane time I stalldelire your grace, to holde mee excused, and not to will mee to doe that whiche I may in no wise performe.

King Henry maruelling at the high wifedome which appeared to be planted in the head of that yong Prince, left off to travell with hym a= ny further in this matter.

In the means time the warres continuing beof fraunce, many townes were belieged, wonne, and lacked, and funder light bickerings and fkirin this chanced betwirte the parties as occasion

But the Englishmen showed themselves to beare fuche hatred towards the Scottes, that fo many as fell into their handes never needed to Wuch what about the same time, there was a A Parliament Parliament holden at Perth, in the which benric Wardaw Bilhop of Saint Androwes, in Bishop Ward- name of althe three estates there assembled, made law innegeth a long and right pithic Daation to this effect, that twhere by the highe policie and prudent diliwence of the kings Maicflie there present, iustice, and all maner of due administratio of lawes and god ordinances were so remined, that nothing so no competent feeding, till their bellies be so stuffremed to be overpassed that might aduaunce to the profite and comoditie of the common wealth, pet was there one wicked blage erept in of late, increasing so fast, that if speed e remedie were not had in time, all those commodities brought into the Realme by his comming. Choulde be of small anaile, and that was fuche superfluous ryot in banketting cheare, and numbers of colly diffies, as were then taken by and bled after the English fashion, both to the great hinderaunce of mans health, and also to the buprofitable walting of their awdes and lubstame.

If the laudable temperancie bled amonaelt the Scottiffe men in olde time were well confis bered, nothing might appeare more contrary and repugnant thereto, than that new kinds of glute tonie then bled, by recepuing more ercesse of ment of nature, through provocatio of such daintic and delicate diffies, confectioned fawces, and beuised potions, as were nowe brought in a= monast them.

As f. 2 fuch gentleme as the king had brought with him forth of England, they were worthis in beed to be cheriffed and had in high fauour. nevther was this abuse to be so greatly imputed buto them, confidering it was appropriate to their naly to be blamed, that had so quickly perided to so great an inconvenience, the enormitie whereof appeared by the fundrie byces that followed of the Vices follow fame, as ereeffe, fenfual luft, flouth, reif, and was wing deine fare. fling of gwdcs.

For if temperancie be the nourither of al bertue, then muste the contrarie, that is to say, intemperancie, be the bringer forth and prouoker of all vice.

If it might therfore please the kings highnelle to Mewelus accultomed wifedome and prouidence in repressing this abuse of costs fare, to much domageable to his people, he shoulde do the thing that was meritozious betoze God, and no leffe profitable & necessary for the publike weale of all his lubieds.

By these and many other the like personations, Billyop Marolaw bled to distonate the king and his people from all superfluous courles of delicate time were not muche knowne amongest the 40 dishes and surfetting bankets . Insomuch that Order to euen then there was order taken, that fewer dy for suppre thes and more spare dyet should be bled through the Realme, licencing Gentlemen only, and that vicofbi on festivall dayes, to be secued with Pies, the ble means is of them not being knowne in Scotland tyll that began. scason.

Penerthelelle, fuch intemperancie is rifen in Thegre processe of time following, that the greenie appearance tite of gluttons in this age may be latillied with latisfed. fed with immoderate gurmandice, that they may uneth fetch breath, through which their noylome furfetting, they fall dayly into fundzie fraunge and lothforne kindes of dileales, being oftentimes killed by the same in their flourishing youth, as by dayly experience plainly appeareth.

The Earle of inuadeth Scotland.

In July, the Erle of Shrewelburie was fente Shrewesburie by the king of England unto the bozdures, with commission, to rayle the power of the Porthe nartes to innade Scotlande, who byon the fud= havne entred and came to Kello, where he burnt one parte of the towne, but the bordurers of the Wers and Temidale not being halfe so many in number as the other, let boon them, lewe, & toke many viloners, and so constrepted them to returne into Englande with small honoz.

The Duke of Albany, hearing of the greate preparation that & Erle of Shrewelburie made, to raise an army of fourescope thousande men to inuade Scotlande, hee likewise sente buto all the The Duke of Albany rey to inuade Englande.

Carles, Lords, and Pobles of the Realme, wilfeth an Army Ting them to raise all suche power as they coulde make in defence of their coufrey, which they did, and to being affembled, the Duke with a mighty army of Scott fr men and certapne frenchmen, with greate & ...ie, marched fogwarde, till hee 20 that I will iustifie. But to answere poure des came to the water of Elke foreaneynst Carlile, and perceiving that the English armie came not then forwarde, he did what he could to vertwade the Poble men to enter into Englande, but as they were in counsell togither about that earnest motion made to them by the Duke, a certapne The words of grane personage sayde to them in this manner: My Lords, hither be we come by the commaun= dement of my Lord governor Duke of Albany, a albeit we be ready to besende our ownenatiue 30 the greate inualions that the Englishmen on vs Realm, cotraire o inualio of our auld enimics of Englande, pet neuerthelesse it leemeth not quid, nor for the weale of our realme of Scotlande to naffe within England with our army to inuade the same at this time, and the earnest perswaliss whilke the governoure makes to be to doe the fame, proceedes alanerly for v pleafure of frace. it appeareth to be lufficiet prough for be lo lang as the king our soueraigne Lozd is within age to defende our owne Realme, and not to inuade: 0= 40 tion to be and our predecellors: for leene the betherwise, we may put the haple countrey, and no= bilitic thereof in hazard of Tinsall, for K. James the fourth brought the Realme of Scotlande to the belt that it ever was, and by the warre, it was brought to the world almost that might bee: for by that warre, was hee and his nobilitie tinte. mhilke Scotlande fare laments. Wherefore by mine advice, let by goe to the governoz, & knowe of him the cause why he waulde perswade by to inuade England.

Then they all came to the gourenours tente. and the Earle of Arrane, an aunciente wife man fpake for them al, and fayd. My Lord gouernor. seth to the go- by pour will and commandement, here is affembled the mailt of the nobilitie of Scotlande with their power, bud a pactece to enter within England, my Lozds here wauld know the cause and quarrell why this warre is begun, gif it myghte pleafe vour gooneffe it thould well fatifie there mindes. The Dake fludied a little space, and lapde, this quellion woulde haif bin demaunded The Dukes cre now, for well you know, that I for very lufe answere to I beare to the Realme of Scotland (of p while Arrane. I haue my name, honoz and lignage) haife palled the Seas from the noble Realme of Fraumce. into this Realme of Scotlande, and great cante there was for me lo to do, to bring pou to a bnitie when re ware in divilion, by reason whereof. poure Realme was like to have bin conquered and destroied. And also the king of France, by niv fuites & intercellion, will toyne with you in sine against & English nation: and when this marre was determinate in the Parliamente, you made me Cantarne, authoriting me to inuade England with Banner displayde. Then was no demaund made of the cause of quarrell, and that I haif done, is by your affente and agreemente, and maund, me thinke you haife just cause to muade England with fire, two zoe, and bloud, gif pe bee not forgetfull, and without you will beart vilhonoz and reveoch for ever. For yee knowe, that this Realme of Scotland is our inheritance, as a portion of the worlde allotted to our nation and auncestors whome we succeede, then where may there bee better warre, than to maintagne thys our naturall inheritance? Is it not dayly feme, make, the greate maniflaughter and murbers, with thefts and spoyles that they do daily? Is not this one cause of warre? to defend the couns trie is the office of a king, the honoz of noble men, and the very feruice of chinalrie, and the dutie na= turall of the communaltie: for I thinke it ainst quarrell, gif we mighte conquere the Realme of England, and annex it to our owne Realme, for the great inturies and wrongs done by that Paginning of our habitation in this Ile of Bipttayne, the Englishmen and we have euer bin cnemics, and be haif they euer hated, and yet hane we cuer withstand them. Suppole, we at the last battell of flodden by chance, tolt our loueraigne Lozde, and divers noble men, whilke was rather by treason of the Lorde Chamberlayne than 0. therwise, who woulde not relieve the kingsamp when he might. And yet I thinke we wanne the field, whilke murber all we noble men aughte to renenge. Therefore I woulde that you Moulde couragiously aduance your selues in this quare rell to get honoz, and to be renenged. Then one Therepy wife man that was prefident of the conniell and wife Coco fwered the governour, laying. Ny Lord, fortune willer, of weir is led by him, that allepdes, and be finis the strake, we can warke na miracles, and hears are the Aords of England ready to encountrible

Ind gif wee inuade their Realme, furely they mill fiabte, for their power fall encreal baply. and ource will diminich. And gif God graunt be the victory (as I trust be shall) pet have me not monne the field, for ready comming is the Carle of Shrewelbury la mikell dread in Fraunce an ve knawe wel, with an great puissant army, and there is na doubt, but the King of England will fend or bring another army gif we fould chance to get the first battaple, and git we get the fecond to field, that will not be without great loffe of mano nobles, by reason whereof, the Bealing mall be weaker, and gif we be ouercommen, bow many fould be flayne, God knawes. They that flie are worthy to be reputed as Traytors to the Ik. and so by wilfulnesse and fule hardinesse, the Realme map be in icoperdie to be bnbone. I far. while the king is within age, we aught to mour na weir, least by weir, we mave being bim to be-Arnition. Then layo the valiant concrnour, here 20 is an puillant army of Scotland, gif we returne. we fall encourage our enimies. Therefore feene you thinke it not gude to inuade, my counfel is. that we camp fill on the bozdures, while we fee what the Englishmen pretends to doe againste our Realme, to the which, the nobles confented. and lay fill there in camp certayne bayes after. After this conference had betwirte the Pobles. and the governour, the Ducene as then beerna bings and Determinations, fent word to the gouernour , and belierd bim, that there might bee a treatic of peace had, and thee promifed to get the Eclarden of the English marches to come to the gouernours camp, buon pleders, where bnto the gonernour condifcended. Heerebppon the Zoide Dacres, Marden of the Wielt Marches of En. gland, came onto the governours camp, and this ther also at that time, was the Queene bir felfe abilinence of war was taken and conenanted, $

In the moneth of Daober next ensuing, there were there Ambalfadoes lent into England, ac= cording to the agreemente in the last treatie, but there were so hard and extreame conditions proponco on the King of Englands behalfe, that the fame could not be accepted, as being contrary to so the honoar & weale of & Realme of Scotlande, as the Scottiffme toke the matter. Ind fo thold Zimballadors returned, withoute agreemente of conclusion of peace, wherebypon folowed greate trouble betwirte them of the bozders of bothe Realmes. This Sommer the Queene remayning at The Queene Striucling, was deliuered of an other Prince, delinered of a- which was baptifed in the Chapel of Strineling, and cleped Arthure, but within eight dapes after, The two yong the fame Prince Deceased at Striueling aforeprinces depar- lapde, and the verie fame Daye, Prince James the kings elocit fonne being at Saint Andzews 3 departed this life also, in such wife that there was but onely fire houres between the time of they? departures out of this worlde: which caused no leffe lamentation through the whole Realme, than there was ion at their brithes.

After this, the Ducene wente buto Saint Tolors towne, where the was honourably receyued with great triumph made by the towne. She was accompanied with the principall men of the Countrey, and from thence the roade to Aber- 40 Cwade the king of Scotlande to ble the the country dine, the king being then come buto hir, where by the Towns and Univerlitie, they were recepued with great joy, triumph, Pageants, berles, and playes, let forth in p best maner for their pastime. They remayned there the space of fiftene dayes, and were highly enterteyned by the Billion of that place. There were exercises and disputations befor in all kinds of sciences in the Colledars and Scholes, with dincele Drations made in Breeke, Latine, and other languages, to the bigh 50 prayle and commendation of the maillers and Aubents in that Cinmerlitie.

From thence the king with the Queene returned to Dunder, where a costly entrie was prepared for them allo, a after they had bin right pringely enterteined there, they came to falkelad.

In the Moneth of Map. lir John Bogthwike commonlye called Capitagne Botthwike, sulpeffed, defamed, and accused of herelle, Capello Bo before the Cardinall, and diverte other Biflions and Paclates there prefent , where notwithflanbing his ablence, the fame being proued by fufficient witnelle agaynft him (as was thought) hee was connid and beclared an heretike: In mage was made to relemble bim, and at the Market croffe of the land Citic, as a ligne and a niemoriall of his condemnation, it was burned, to the feare and example of other, but he himfelte efeaped their handes and got into Englande, where he was recepued.

This years the King of England abuertifco of the neceting of the Emperoz, the French King, The king and Pope, at the Citie of Dice, boubting fonte Englande practice to be bruiled there agapult him, sent to deth to the blance of Scotland the Wallstone of Scotland the king of Scotland, the L. Milliam homard. deliring him as his most tender kinsman and nephew, to meete him at the citie of Porke in Englande, where he would communicate fuch things with bin, as thouse be for the weak of both the realmes: and therewith the King of Englange trusting that the king of Scotlande would have fulfilled his defire, caused great preparation to be made at Vorke for the recepuing of him. But albeit the king of Scotlande was willing of himfelfe to haue walled into Englande, to have met and feene his Uncle pet after long trafoning and deliberation of bis Counsaile and Belates alsembled for that purpole, calling in their mindes (as they toke it) what daunger might fall to him and his realme, if he thould paffeinto Englande. in case he flouid be stayed and boiden there, contrarie to his will, as king James bis pjedeellet was, having no succession of his boote and a gaine, for that it was certainly knowner that the principall cause why the King of Engineers quired this meeting of enterniem, was to perin Scotlande, as be bad bone within the of England, in abolifhing the Popes authorite making himfelle supreme beare of the Control erpulling religious persons outs of these and fealing the iewels of their houles and and renies, with fuch like information. chaunced their king thould attempt the thought he Could lofe the friendlip in the betwirt bim, the Pope, the Emperor land von king, that were his great friends and and rates. Herebyon they persuader him to find by their adule lent pleasant-letters and buto the layd king of Englande, being have bim exculed, for that he could the to Englande at that time, haning fucht caules of abyding at bome, as Moule be bnberstande by his Imballabors, later went to lende to him, as well for this months with causes. And shortly after Ce Jaines Lerzmouth was appoputed to go as Imballador into Ence land, as well to make the kings excuse for his not comming to meet the king of England at Posk! as allo to make complaint byon certaine inpas flous made by the boyderers of Englande into Scotland, and also for the vling of the Debatable ground betwirt the two Realmes. But the king of England fore offended that the king of Scotmes lande woulde not fatisfie his request, to meete to berievarely and seldome scene before, that a king him at Pozke (as befoze is recited, would admitte no creule, but determined to make warre into Scotland, albeit as the Scottiffmen alledge, bee would not fuffer the fame to be underflood, till he had prepared all things in a readincife: and in the meane time fent Commissioners to merte with the Scots comillioners boon the Debatable grofid to talk for redreffe to be made of harmes done pp= on the borders, but no good conclusion coulde be agreed byon by thele commissioners, neither tous 20 be a perpetual testimonic of they? reproch for es ching the debatable land, not pet for revaring of wionas cone by inualions.

But that the truth concerning the causes of this warre moucd at this present by that noble Prince king henrie the. biil. map the better aupeare, I baue thought and here to let downe the fame as they were drawne forth and publifled in print to the whole worlde by the fayde king in a little Phaniplet bnder this title.

A declaration contening the inft causes and considerations of this present warre with the Scots, wherein also appeareth the true and right title that the kings most royal Maiestie hath to his soueraintie of Scotlad, and thus it beginneth.

Baue alwayes hitherto so much abhorred and fice war fled, by our neighbot & nephew the king of Scots, one who about al other for our manifold benefits 40 rently be deviced e fent, than path bin made on the towards him, bath most fust cause to loue vs., to honor vs, and to reivice in our quietneffe: we have thought good to notific buto the worlde his doings and behanioz in the viouocatio of this war, and like wife the meanes and wayes by bs to efthem and augustic, and the full and true occasions whereby we be now proudked to profecute the fame, and by betterace and bemulging of that matter, to disburden some part of our inwards displeasure and griefe: and the circumstaunces 50 fo many ways botto to be of the Bell fort, towns knowns, to lamens overly with the worlde the infidelitic of this time, in which things of fache ensymitic do brust out and appeare. The king of Scottes our nephew and neighbour, whom wer in his youth and tender age preferned and mainteyned from the great dannger of other, and by our authoritie and power, conduited him lafely to the royall policision of his cliate, he now compelleth and enforceth be for melecuation of out bonour and right, to ble our pupflaunce and power agapult him. The lyke bukindnelle bath beene beuetofore flewed by other in femblable cafes as gayust Gods lawe, mans lawe, and all humanitie: but the oftner it chaunceth, the moze it is to be abhorred, and yet in the persons of Briners, for the raritie of them can fo happen but fels Dome, as it hath now conic to paffe. It bath bene of Scottes hath had in maryage a daughter of Englande. Wie cannot, ne will not reprebende the king our fathers affe therein, but lament and bee fozieit toke no better effett. The king our father in that matter mynded love, amitie, and perpetual frienothip betwene the posteritie of both which how lone it fayled, the death of the Tking of Scottes, as a due punifhment of God, for bis briust inuation into this our Realme, is and that uer, and pet in that present time coulde not the bukinderle of the father extinguish in by the naturall loue of our nephew his sonne, being then in the milerable age of tender pouth:but we the foractting the displeasure that Would have morthily provoked by to invade that realm, nourified and brought up our nephew, to atchieve his fathers policilió e gouernmet, wherin he now la bukinde ly victh and behaueth himfelfe towards bs. as he 30 covelleth be to take armoz & warre agaynt him. It is specially to be noted, byen what groundes. and by what meanes we be conclled to this mar. wherein among other is our chiefe griefe and bife picalure, that wader a colour of faire foreche flate fering words, we be in deed to inturied, cotemner and despited, as we sught not with sufferance to permit, and valle ouer: wordes whitings. letters. mellages, amballabes, creufes, allegations, conib not more picalantly, more gently, ne more reneking of Scots behalfe onto by seener we truffer the tree would bring forth god fruit: that was of the one part of logod a flocker and cotinually in apparance put forth to favre haddes : and therfore would hardly believe or contract to other, that exer alledged the deedes of the contrarie being nenerthelelle the fame breds formamifelt as me mult theroes have regarded them, had not we beene for loth to thinke rull of our newhere debour we have Vs, and therefore having a mellage fent unto be the years pail from our sayde neuhein.and a near mile made for the repayring of the laybe King of Scottes buto by to Pople, and after greate preparation on our part made therefore, the lame meeting was not onthy disappoynted, but also at our being at Porke in the lieu-therof, an inuation made by our layo nephrinds subjectes into pur lande, beclaring an euident contempt and bilvite of bs : we were yet glader to impute the pefault of the meeting to the aduite of his counfaile, and the invalion of the lewducife of his fubtedes, and according therebuto gaue as benique and gentle audience to luch Imballadours as repapzed hither at Chaiftmalle afterwarde, as if no fuch cause of vispleasure had occurred, specially confidering the good wordes, fwerte wordes, plealant wordes, efflones proponed by the lapde 10 maner, offring redreffe and reformation of all at-Ambalfavors, not oncly to excule that was palt, but also to perswave kinonelle and perfite amitie to enfue.

And albeit the king of Scottes haning contrarie to the article of the league of amitie receps ned and intertepned suche revels as were of the chief and principal, in fluring the infurredion in the Mosth agaynft vs, with refulall befoze time, buon request made to restoze the same, pet neuer. theleffe, ppon offer made, the layde Imbastadors 20 that we gaue benigne audience to the layd Lepts to lende commission to the borderers, to determin the debates of the confines in the lame with fo great a pretence of amitie, and lo fayre words as coulde be in speech defired, we were content for the time to forbeare to preffe them ouer extreme-In in the matter of rebels. Libeit we neuer remitted the same, but bestrous to make triall of oure Tapde neubem in fome correspondence of Deedes, condificended to the fending of Commissioners to the botoces, which to our great charge wee did, 39 by fir Robert Bowes for a renenge thereof, the and the king of Scottes our layde nephew the femblable: where after great tranaile made by our Commuffioners, this fruite enlued, that beingfor our part chalenged, a peece of our grounde plainly blurped by the Stettes, and of no greate balue, being allo for the fame fheived luche eui-Bence, as more substanciall, more autentique, plaine and evident, cannot bee brought forth for any part of grounde within our Realme : the Same was neuerthelelle by them benied, refuled, 40 Bredes, which appeared buto be of that lost, as and the enibence onely for this cause reieded, that it was made (as they alledged) by Engliftmen. and pet it was fo auncient, as it coulde not bee counterfept now, and the value of the ground fo little, and of to fmall weight as no man woulde haur attempted to fallifie for luch a matter. Ind pet this deniall being in this wife made buto our Commissioners, they neverthelesse by our commoundement departed as friends from the commissioners of Scotlande, taking order as hath 50 brene accustomed, for god rule bpon the borders in the meane time.

After which their recelle, the Logoe Marwell marden of the well Warches of Scotland, made Parlamation for good rule, but vet abbed theremith that the beiderers of Scotlan fould mithbraws their godes from the borderers of Englaude, and incontinent the Scottiff nien begoe-rers, the fourth of July entred into our Realme fodamly, and spopled our fubicites contrariete our leagues, euen after fuch extremitie as it ban beene in the time of open warre, whereat wee much maruepled, and were compelled therefore to furnish our bezoccs with a garnifon for defence of the fame. Wherebpon the king of Scots fent buto by James Leyemouth mailter of his houfe holde, with letters deviled in the most pleasaunt tempts. And pet neuerthelelle,at the entrie of the fard Lepimouth into England, a great number of the Scottes then not loked for, made a forre into our borders, to the great annoyaunce of our subjects, and to their extreme detriment, where with, and with that buleenly diffimulation, we mere not a little moued, as reason woulde wee flould : and pet did we not finally to ertremely profecute and continue our lay de displeasure, but mouth, and fuffred our felfe to bce fomewhat altered by his wordes and fayte promiles, tending to the perfmalion that we ever delired to find the king of Stottes fuch a nephew buto bs. as ont proximitic of bloud, with our gratuitle buto him Did require.

In the meane time of thele fapze wordes, the Deedes of the borderers were as extreme as might be, and our fubicats (popled : and in a road made fine fir Robert Bomes, to many other were taken palloners, e yet betepned in Scotlab without putting them to fine of raunfome, as hath beene cuer accultomed. Ind being at the fame time a furleyance made on both flocs, at the luyte of the fayde Lepzmouth for a feafon : the Scottes ceafed not to make fundry mustions into our realin, in luch wile, as we were compelled to logget faire wordes, and onely to confider the king of Scots they ought not for our Ductic in Defence of oure subicurs, ne could not in respect of our honour, be paffed ouer bureformed : and therefore put in a readinelle our armie as a due meane whereby we might attaine fuch a prace, as for the lafegathe of our fubicats we be bound to procurs.

Efter which perparation made pant knows ledge had thereof, the king of Scottes crafed not to ble his accultonicd means of tayse wordes, tobich in our naturall inclination wrought citfones they; accustomed effeit, evermoje belicons to finde in the King of Scottes fuch regarde and respect to be declared in decdes, as the contespons dence of naturall love in the nephew to suche an uncle as we have thewed our felle towarde him, Doth requice. Wherefore bpon new reques and fupte made bito bs, we betermined to flay oure armic at Porke, appoynting the Duke of Porkfalle our Dieutenant, the Dozde priny feale, the Biftiop of Durham, the Malter of our hogles, there to commen, treate, and conclude with the ambatiadours of Scotland, for an amity and reace, upon suche condition, as by reason and co cutte were indifferent, wherby the warre might be efelicimed, being by fundey invalious of the Scottes then opened and manifelte. In this communication betweene our and their commalitoners, after divers degrees of commission to french by the Scots, and finally one that was trout Commissioners allowed, matters were proposed for conclusion of amitie, nothing diffiele uz harde of our parte , but so agrecable to maion, as the commiffioners of Scotland layde they doubted not but if it might be brought to palle that the King of Scottes our Pepheme might have a meeting with vs, al matters huld eafily be componed and determined: wherevpon they left speaking of any articles of amity, and 20 caring how much they charged therin the king, the Ambassadours of Scotlande made muche outwarde toy in comunicatio of meeting. They flewed themselves in wordes, fashion and behautour much to delight in it, to reloyce in it, and there with, thought it easie and facile to bee concluded and accomplished, and for their parte they twke it then for a thing pasted, a thing conchited, and most certayne to take effett, and onle desired sire dayes to obtagne answeare from their Mafter , and our army from that time to 30 raunsome, contrary to all custome and blage of flay and goe no further : wherebnto our Commilioners then agreed. After thele are dayes was fent a commission out of Scotland, with power to conclude a meeting precifely at fuch a place, as they knew wel we should not, ne could not in Celinter oblerue and keepe, wherewith when our Commissioners were miscotent, the Imballadours of Scotlande to releue that difpleasure, and to temper the matter whereby to winne more tyme, Mewed forth their infirus 40 tions, wherein liberty was given to the Imballadours to exceede their commission in the appointment of the place, and to confent to any other p by our commissioners should be thought connenient: which manner of proceeding when our Comissioners refused, alleaging that they would not conclude a meeting with men has uing no commission therebuto, the Ambassa. dours of Scotland byon pretence to lende for & more ample and large commission, agreeable to their instructions for appointment of the place, obtayned a delay of other ure dayes to lende for toe lande ample commission without restraint of place: And after these fire dayer they brought forth a newe commission, made in a good forme and without exception: but therewith also they We'ved newe instructions, contayning suche a restraynt as the former commission did cotaine, fo as the liberty given to the Commissioners in the commission was now at the laste remoued and taken away by the instructions, with addition of a speciall charge to the Ambassadours, not to exceede the fame. Ind thus first the Imbassadours of Scotland seemed to have a will and defire to conclude a place feemely and conuenient, whiche for want of commission they might not do, and at the last might baue concluded a meeting by bertue of their committio, and then for feare of the commaundement in their fecond instructions they durst not. And so they flewed their first instructions partly to ercufe their King, who fould feeme fecretcly to will moze, than in the commission he did openly profeste. And then with an ample commistio from the King they shewed their secrete instru-Kions for defence of themselves, why they pro= creded not according to their commission, not mhose faulte they disclosed, to discharge themselves, trullyng that by benefite of the Winter approching, and the time loft in their communicatio, their Mafter fould be defended against pur power for this peere, without doing for their parte that by honour, right lawe, and leagues they be obliged and bounde to do. Ind in this meane time our subiedes being taken pryfoners in Scotlande, coulde not be deliuered buon any the borderers in the time of peace and warre. And in this meane tyme stayed a great part of our army already preffed, and in our wages to go fozwarde . In this time Inballadours (as pe haue beard) affembled to talke of an amitie. but cocluded none. The treating of amity was put ouer by communication of a meeting. The communication of meeting was to handled by alteration of commission and instructions on their behalf, as it appeareth a playme Deuice one ly invented for a delay, whiche both given be light, whereboon moze certapnely to inoge the King of Scottes inward affection towarde bes whose deedes and wordes well waved and cons Adered, doth us plainely to unacuffande how to hath cotinually labored to abuse be with Corete and plealant wordes, & to fallifie the appetites of other at home and abrode with his buking? e distributed at account of the profession of th an indissoluble amity, he allebatth kinred, he knowledgeth benefites, onely the faulte is; that hee speaketh an other language to all the morloe in deedes, and thereby to toucheth be in honour and denegation of Juffice, as we be inforced and compelled to vie the famile whiche God hath put in our handes as an extreeme tes medy, whereby to obtagne bothe quietnelle for our lubicates, and also that is due buto by by ff.

right, paces aud leagues . Wier haue paciently fuffered many delusious, and notably the laste peere, when we made preparation at Porke for his repaire to vs. But thould we luffer our people and subjects to be so oft spoyled without renicop? this is done by the Scottes what fo= ener their wordes be. Should wee luffer our rebels to be detayned cottary to the leagues withour remedy? this is also done by them what focuer their wozdes be. Should wee fuffer our 10 lande to be blurped contrary to our most plaine enidence, onely byon a will, perde, a arrogancie of the other party?this is done by them whatlo= euer their wordes be. And all these be ouer pre= fumptuously done agapuli bs, and give suche fignification of their arrogancy, as it is necessa= ry for vs to oppresse it in the beginning, least they should gather further courage, to the greater displeasure of bs and our posterity hereafter. And pet in the intreating of this matter, if wee 20 had not evidently perceived the lacke of such affection as proximity of bloud Mould require, we would much rather have remitted these iniuries in respect of proximity of bloud to our Pephew, than we did heretofoze the inualio of his father. But confidering we be to lurely alcertayned of the lacke thereof, and that our bloud is there frozen with the colde apre of Scotlande, there was never Prince more violently compelled to ivarre, than we be by the bukind Dealing, buill 30 behaniour, burgincely demeanor of him that yet in nature is our Pephew, and in his after and decoes, declareth himselfe not to be moved ther= with, ne to have such earnest regarde to the obfernation of his pactes and leagues, ne fach refped to the intertaynement of the administra= tion of Auftree, ag naturall equitie bindeth, and confernation of equity both require: whiche wee much lament and be fozy foz, and vse nowe our force and puissance against him, not for reuege= 40 appeareth first by history written by suche as ment of our prinate vilplealure (beyng to often delinered as were have bene) but for reconcery of our right, the prefernation of our subiedes from iniurles, and the observation of suche leagues as have passed betweene vs, firmely trusting, that almighty God buder whome we rangue, will affilt and appeour inst proceedings herein to the furtheraunce and advancement of the right, whiche wee doubte not Call euer prenaple against wrong, faldimo, decepte, and diffinula- 50 as the mater of title being molleplayne, is furtion. But now to returne to the purpole for the doings in Scotlande. About the same time that the bidozy before mencioned chanced to the Scottes, Robert Carncozfe bifhop of Rolle Departed this life , to 50 Scotland for fundry great caufes and refpetts, whome succeeded Dauid Pantane, Secretary to the governour and Priour of S. Mary Ile.

In Aprill William Steward biffiop of Aberden likewife beceafed, and mafter William Bordon Chacellog of Murray, bucle to George Erle of Huntley , was by the Cardinals luyte promoted to that fce, greatly to the displeasure of the Erle of Angus that laboured to haue preferred an other thereto. For this 4 other causes the Cardinal was greatly in hatred of $ Dowclasses. This prece also Montgomery otherwile called Monfier de Lozges, knight of the oz= Moufieur! der of S. Michael, was lent by the French king Lorges leat with iiij.thouland frenchmen into Scotlande to affift the Scottes against England, belanded at Dunbertayne, and came in god order to Edenburgh the riii. of May : he brought with chaell, to inuest therewith the Lord governour, Michaels of the Erles of Angus, Huntley, and Argile. Her- der. with allo was an army of Scottes repled, and iopning with the Frenchmen, they approched & bordures where they lay for a fealon, but the Anarmy of Erle of Hertfozd Lientenant generall of the Scots liethe the bordung Porth partes comming downe, twke luch diredion for the lafe keeping of the English bozdures, that after the Scottes had lapne there in In time of the great rebellion in the Porth 20 campe a certayne space without atchieuing any great enterprice, though some notable exploit was loked for to have bene attempted by them at that present, they brake by they armie and returned home.

The.rbi of September about three or foure hundred Scottes and frenchmen , attempted to enter into England on the east bozoures, but French md the Englishmen percepuing where they were veribiones aboute to palle by a certayne lirept, they let bpb ing, and taking to the number of seven store of them. Amongst other that were taken, one of the Sonnes to the Lord hune, with a french capitarne, and George Elphinston Archer of the cozys to the french king, were accompted thief. Allo on the West bordures Robert Marwell eldelt fonne to the Lord Marwels, was taken The Lord in a road e made by him e others into the En- Maxwelles glith confines on that five, although at an other longe take to Scotlande were diffressed, the mozeparte of them beyng taken og Clayne. In this meane time the king of England belirous to hauethe feruice of the Fles of moued the Erle Linor to deale with them to b ende, whiche hee did, and his travell toke luche effect, that the Fland men were cotented to relt at the king of Englande his denotion , partely The Erke for that they were in a maner fworne enimies Leanor ? to the Erle of Argyle and his family, and parts of the live by for that they doubted the king of Englands for enerthek puystance if he should attempt to inuade those pattics: and againe, bearing an olde speciall fa-1101 to the Carle of Lennor and his house, ha= ning an auntient bonde of alliance and amitie with the fame, they were the more ready to fa= tiffic his motion. Herebpon, they elected amoult them a Lozde of the Mes, nexte of the bloud, a title long fithence righte obious to the flate of Scotland, and by the inducement of the Earle of Lennor, her was contented as the Kyng of Englands pentioner, to recepne two thousand in Crownes of him yearely, with certapne riche apparel of cloth of golde and filter from the faid Carle.

The first profe he attempted to We'm of hys fernice in the King of Englands behalfe, was this, bauing instructions thereto from the Erle of Lennor, bnock colour of a conference, for matters touching the elfate of the Countrep, he had suborned one of his aliance and servantes. called & Clane Reignald, to entrappe the Erles 20 of Irquite and Quitley, and although they elcaped very narrowly, the Lord Louet an aun= tient Baron, and greate friende to those two Carles, was flavne by the land Clane, togyther with feaven hundred of his kinfinen and frieds, in lo nunche, that there remayned not but one yong boy of that lignage to succeede in that Lords lands.

After this, the L. of the Iles with fire 99.me embarqued in certapue bellels, palled ouer into' 30 Carrise, harried and brent the lands of the Erle Callels, then a great enimie to the Kyng of England. In this boyage he got great spoiles, and flew many of the enimies: after which ens terprise so atchieuco, he came with his power by Sca, and landed in Irelande, where the Garles of Lennor and Demonde were, with twelve dundzed Friffmenne, appoynted to iogne with him, that with their whole power they myahte inuade the Earle of Frquites Countreys, and 40 confequently the mapne lande of Scotlande at the brode lode. But before the preparation could be made ready for that iourney, the newe Lord of the Fles deceasird, whose buriall in Trelande to honoz the Carle of Lennor, flode the Kyng of England in foure hundred pounds fterling. But now to returne buto pooings on the hoze dures betwirt England and Scotland in thys fealon. De Wall bioerstand, that after the army of Scotland was broken up, the Earle of Hert's 50 ford by vertue of his comission regled an army in the Countreys of the further fior of Trente Pothwardes, so that when the same was alsembled togither with such straungers as were then in the Kynges mages, they were in all of concerne and the men twelve thoulands fighting men. With thys uriny garded with great ftoge of artillerie, munition, and all mani-

Many other final innations were made as wel! by the one parte as the other, and some skiring thes fell out betwire them, sometime to the losse of the Stottille, and sometime of the Englishe. according to the course of warre. In the Lent feason the Cardinall of S. Indiewes caused al the Billioppes and Dielates of the Realnie to allemble at the towne of S. Indrewes, where a learned man, named M. Bevige Willchart. that had bir in the Scholes of Germany, was: accused of Heresic, which he had (as was alled. ged against him) publiquely preached and pris nately taught in Dundee, Brethin, and bouers other parts of Scotlad, fince bys returne home. Sir James Leiremonth Pro- Shortly after, to witte, the last of Marche, The de uost of Saint Andrewes, assembled all y people to Francis the Frenche King deceased, and bys the fre of that Towns for the rescue of the Cardinall. after he heard that the conspirators were entred the Castel, but they shewed the dead body of the Cardinall over the walles, as a spectacle to the people, and so they made no further atttempte. fith they lawe no meane how to remedie or re= uenge the matter at that present. The cause that moved the conspirators thus to kyll the Cardinall, was thought to be partly in revenge of the brenning of M. Beorge Wischart, fea= 20 ring to be ferued with the fame faule, and in the ende to bee made to drinke of the same cuppe. Partly also it was thoughte they attemuted it through counfell of some greate menne of the Realme, that hadde concepued some deadly ha= tred against him.

The fame enening, the olde Lard of Grange, Maister Benry Balnauis, one of the Counsell of the Realine, and landipe Gentlemen of the furname of the Welnines, John Knodes and 30 others, to the number of leven scoze persons, entred the Caffell to their supporte, taking bppon them to keepe it against the governour and hys

The Gouernour hearing that his deere coufin the Cardinall was thus made away, affembled the greate Lordes of the Realme, as the Earles of Angus, Huntley, Argyle, and others, by whose aduise hee called a Parliamente, and The flavers of forfalted them that had flapne the Cardinall, 40 ftrongly land aboute the Caffell there. and kept the Castell of Saint Andrewes:here= with also hee repsed a power and besieged the fame Caffell, planting divers pecces of greate The Casell of artilleric against it, but it was so strongly fur-Saint Andrews nilled with all manner of artillerie and munition by the Cardinall in his life time, that they within cared little for all the enforcements that their aduerlaries withoute coulde aduaunce a= gainst them, wherebyd, after that the liege had continued the space of three monethes, the Go= 50 ucrnour was glad to take an appoputate with them within, to the end be might get out of their handes his eldest sonne, who was remayning with the Cardinall at the time when hee was murthered, and so kepte by them that dyothe murther, toll nowe they agreed to delyuer hom to his father, with condition that hee Goulde reple his liege.

They delivered also the dead bodye of the Cardinall, after it had lapne buried in a dungbill within the Castell, cuer sithence the daye in which they flew him.

In the years next enfuing, King henry the 15 enght departed this life, after whome, succeeded The Ki his some Edward, the syrt of that name King England of England, France and Treland.

In this meane tyme the Englichmen had increased they nubers of Almaignes and other firaungers, and not onely furnified their fortes with new supplies of men, but also hav an army in the fieldes whiche lap most anende at Dung glas, and one while belieged hume calfell, but after they lawe themselves disappoynted of the meane, wherby they supposed to have recquered 30 none, but of their women and boyes, wherebpon it, they review from thence and spoyled the most parte of Tinivale and other the Marches thereabout, in reucinge as they alledged, of the dilloyaltic and breache of promife proned in the allured Scottes. Generall of this army was the Erle of Rutland, Lieutenant at that present of the Porth partes, a noble man right baliaunt, wife, well aduited, and flaved in his dealings, very honorable & courteous in al his demeanor. De was accompanied with Capitaynes of god 40 and got quite out of daunger. estimatió and approued prowes, as ar Richard Maners, fir Frauncis Leake, fir John Sauage, fir Thomas Polcroft, fir Dewald Wulftrome and others. He so behaved himselse in that Daungerous time of the vorozes and rebellious commotions of the commos, through the more parte of the realme of Englande, that although the appoprited forces agapuft Scotlande were stayed, and turned to the suppression of the rebelles, to the encouragement no doubte bothe of 50 feruyng the king of Englande, was longed in Scottes and frenchmen in Scotland, pet thep were so fronted and kept in awe by that army bnder the layde Eile of Rutland, that they rather loft than gapned in this season at the Englishmens handes.

It one tyme the same army bnder the conduit of the lapde Erle, valling forth with a conuop of vitaples buto hadington, came lo luddenly byon the Frenchmen where they lay in campe, that whether through defaulte of they? skowics or other nealigence vsed by them, or through the great diligence and promident fores wardnesse shewed by the Englishme, the Frech men were in suche hazarde to have bene offerly men in danger distressed, that if the Englishmen had not doubs to have bene ted more than by many was thought needefull, diffresed. they might have ouerthrowen, taken and flaine the Frenchmen, as was supposed at they pleas fure. But the Englichmen at theps first comming in fight of them (as it stode with the reafon of marre, fith by aduenturying raffly often. times in such cases to late repentance casily en= fueth) stayed, the better to coceque of that which they had to do: whereby the Frenchmenne had leasure to marche their wayes a mayne pace, till they were got out of daunger: for after they ones beheld the troupes of the English horseme men from letting a lande any vietuals there, to 20 almost at their elbowes, and herewith the battayle of the Alinaignes suddenly appearing on the hill toppe ready to come downe opon them, men recire. it was no neede to bidde them packe away.

The Scottes light hoplemen commyng on the backe of the English army, percepued where the Almaignes (to make them ready to giue bas tayle) had throwen of their clokes and lefte the same with all other their baggage and stuffe whiche they had aboute them in the keeping of thole Scottes boglemen not minding to luffer The baggage fuch a pray to escape they handes came gallops of the English ping in, and toke all the beste sluffe they could spoyled by the lay holde bpon, and returned in fafetie betoze as Scottish horfny enimy might come backe to the refkew.

The Almaignes were in no finall chante for the loffe of their garments and other necessaries, but there was no belve then to feeke remedy in that behalte, for the Scottes were withdrawen

Things passing in this wife in Scotland in p Commer of this peare. 15 49. the Englishme were not onely in the means time foze troubled to berly travell of the Comilliances appointed to be commit with commotions rarked by the commons of that realme, but also with the warres which the Frenche king made agaynst them, within the countrey of Bouilongnoys, so that they had not meane to imploy their forces against Scotland as they had determined to have done, as partely before and more largely in the bistory of England is mentioned, by reason whereof, anone after Michaelmas they gaue oner y keepyng of Hadingto, & raling their fortification there, they 20 returned into England to the great reloyling of the inhabitantes of Louthian, to whome that tolone had given occasion of greate troubles & calamities. Apon the gining ouer thus of havington, the Bouernour & the Ducene Domager were aduanced, in hope to recouer againe al that the Englichme helde within the boundes of Scotland, but first it was thought good to affay the winning of Broghtie Crag, for it founded (as was thought) greatly to the diminishing of 30 the estimation, atwell of the Scots as frenchmen, that the Englithmen thould keepe fote fo farre within the realme, in dispite of their whole pnystance.

Honourable sir Henry Sydney Knight,
Lorde Deputie Generall of Irelande, Lorde president of Wales, Knight of the moste noble Order of the Garter, and one of hir Maiesties privie Counsel within hir Realme of Englande.

norable, to gather the perticular Histories of divers Countries and Nations, to joyn with a Cosmographie, which one Reginald V Voulse late Printer to the Queenes Maiestie, meant to publishe in our English tounge: when I came to cosider of the Histories of Iresland, I founde my selfe so vnprouided of helpes, to set downe any perticular discourse therof, that I was in dispaire to enterprice to write any thing at all concerning that realme, otherwise that incidently, as sell to purpose, to touche the same in the Historie of England.

At length yet as Maister V Voulses vse vvasto imparteto me all suchehelpes as he might at any hande procure for my furtherance, in the collections of the other Histories, vvherevvith I specially dealte, his happe was to light also vpon a copie of twoo Bookes of the Irishe Histories, compiled by one Edmond Campion, fellovv somtime of S. Iohn Baptists Colledge in Oxforde, very vvell penned certenly, but so briefe, as it vvere to be vvished that occasion had served him to have vsed more leysure, and thereby to have delivered to vs a larger discourse of the same Histories : for as he himselfe confesseth, hee had not paste tenne vveekes space to gather his mater: a very shorte time doubtlesse for suche a pecce of vvorke. Bur hovve breefe so euer I founde him, at the persuasion of Maister VVoulse, vpon the having of that copie, I resolved to make shift to frame a speciall Historie of Irelande, in like maner as I had done of other Regions, followyng Campions order, and setting dovvne his ovvne vvordes, excepte in places vvhere I had mater to enlarge that (out of other Authours,) which he had written in briefe: and this I have thought good to fignifie, the rather for that I esteeme it good dealing in no vvise to defraude him of his due deserued prayse.

But novv after I had continued the Historie, and enlarged it out of Giraldus Cambrensis, Flatsbury, Henry of Marleburgh, and other, till the yeare. 1509. in which that samous Prince Henry the. viij. began his reigne, some of those that were to bestove the charges of the Impression, procured a learned Gentleman Maister Richard Stanyhurst, to continue it from thence forwarde as he savv occasion, being surnished with mater to enlarge the worke, whereof for those later times I foundemy selfe viterly voyde, more than that whiche Campion had deliuered. VVhat I have done herein, your Honours discretion shall easily coceyue. For the impersection sith it is the first that hath bene set forth in Printe, I craue most humbly pardon of your good Lordshippe, beseeching you rather to respect my good will than the perfect nesses the vvorke, vvhiche the vvantes considered for the orderly furnishing thereof, is not to be looked for in the skilfull, muche lesse in me the meanest of all, and least able to performeit. Hauing presented the right Honorable the Erle of Leycester with the Historie of Scotlande, to vyhome (as I have hearde) Campion made Dedication of his booke, I coulde not remember me to vvhome I might more conveniently offer this my travellin this Historie of Ireland, than to your Lordship, being hir Maiesties Lieutenant in that Realme. And therfore in most humble vvise I exhibite the booke to your Honour, beseeching the same to beare with my bolde attempt therein, and to receyue it in good parte from him that wished to have more amplie satisfied your good Lordshippes expectation, if abilitie might have answered good will,

Thus I beseech the Lorde to guyde your hartein his holy vvayes, and to furnish you with politike prudence and skilfull knowledge, to gouerne in your estate and office, so as your doyngs may redounde to his glorie, the suretie of hir Maiesties do. minion there, your ovvne aduancement in Honour, and consequently to the sure supporte and peaceable quietnesse of the true and loyall subjectes of that Realme.

The inhabitantes of the english pale have bene in olde tyme so much addiced to all civilitie, and so farre sequestred from banbarous lauagenelle, as their only mother tondue was English. And truelnas long: as The th theferempaled divellers did sunder theselves litted as well in land as in language, fro the Arithe: amount rudant s was day by dap in the countrey laps truck phated civilitie engraced god lawes ella blithed, loyaltie observed, rebeliton suppress fediand in fine the coone of a pong England, was tyke to thote in Ireland. But whetheir posteritie became not all togither so warpin keeping, as their auncestors were valiant in conquering, and the Irith language was free dennized in & English pale: this canker toke fuch deperote, as the body that before was whole and sounde, was by little and little fer ffered, and in maner wholp putrified. And not onely this parcel of Ireland grew to that civilitie, but also Wliter and the greater part of Hounster, as by the sequele of the Irishe history shall plainely appeare. But of all o ther places, Weilcforde with the territorge meilion bayed, and perclosed within the river called whole the Pill, was so quite estranged from Irily English ry, as if a travailer of the Irith (which was Eve P) rare in those dayes) had picht his fote within the pile and spoken Trishe, the Weilefordias would commaunde hym forthwith to turne the other ende of his tongue, and Tpeake En glithe, oz elle bzing his trouchman with him. But in our dayes they have to aquainted the sclues with the Irishe, as they have made a mingle mangle, or gailamaulfrey of both the languages, and have in such medley of thece keringle to crabbedly tumbled them both toarther, as commonly the inhabitants of the meaner fort speake neyther god English nor nov Friffic.

There was of late dayes one of the Beres of England font to Welefeford as Commilie mer, to decide the controverlies of that cour trep, and earing in affable wife the ruce come plaintes of the countrey clownes, he concep, tied here and there-fometyme a worde, other or. wholes a fentence. The noble man being bery glad that boon has first commung to Ires land, he broce food to many wordes, told one of his familiar frends, that he fode in very great hope, to become hortly a well spoken man in the Trille, supposing that the blunte uconic had pratice Frithe, all the while they iangled Englishe. Howblitto this day, the proce of the cloe nunciont Chauser English, archept as well there as in Fingall. As thep terme a ipider, an attercop, a wilve, a mad. a lumpe of bread, a pocket or a pucket, a Sils ibuck, a coppronie, a faggot, a bleafe, or a blase, for the thort burning of its as I tudge, a Philition, a leache, a gappe, a sharde, a base court or quadrangle, a bawen, or rather; as I suppose, a bartonif household of folkes! meany: Sharppe, keine, effraunge, bncouth, calle , eth or efe, a dungbill, a misen jas for the worde bater, that in English purporteth a lane, bearing to an high way, I take it for a mere Trific worde, that crepte bnawares into the English, thorough the daily entercourse of the English and Irish inhabitants. And where as commonly in all countreps; the women speake most neately and pertelp. whiche Tully in hos thirde boke de Oratore, speaking in the person of Crassus, seemed to have observed vet not with standing in Ire. cland it falloth out contrary. For the women have in theve English tongue an harrish and breade hynd of prenunciation, with otterpng their wordes to pentalp a faintly, as though ther were halfe licke, and ready to call for a possette. And most commonly in wordes of two fillables, they give the last the accent. As they lay, Markeate, Balkeate, Golleupe, Dulloare, Aobart, Diclafe, ic. which doubt! lette doth dilbeautifie their Englishe aboue measure. And if they could be weaned from that courupt cufform, there is none that could billyke of their English.

Utre percale some inappith carper will take me at rebounde, and knuttingly luibbe me, for debacing the Triff language. But truely who focuer Hall be sounde so overthwartly bent he takes the matter far awrie. For as my fall is very fimple therein, to I woulde be leath, to disueple my rashnesse, in giving to herbozow it felf within the lawes of Enas life conquerours: no truely. And nowe that I have fallen bnawares into this discourse. it will not be far amille to france somewhat roundly byon this poput. It is knowen, and by the holfozie, pou mape in part percevue, how beauely Alfter Alhillon flogished. The Englishe families were there implanted the Irith epther otterly expelled ,02 wholly lubdued, the lawes duely executed, the revenue great, and onely English spoken. But what brought it to this present ruine and decape? I doubt not but pou gelle befoze I tell pou. They were environned a copassed with evill neighbours. Peighbourhode bredde acquains tance, acquaintance wafted in & Irify togue, the Trishe hoked with it attyze, attyze haled rudencs, rudenesse engended ianozace, iano: raunce brought contempt of lawes, the contempt of lawes beed rebellio, rebellion raked thereto warres, and so cosequently the otter becap and desolatio of that worthy countrev.

If these chinkes, when first they beganneto chappe, had beine diligently by the dwellers fropt, hir Maiestie at this vave, to hir great charges, thoulde not have beene occasioned, to damme by with many thousand poundes, pea & with the worthy carkalles of valiaunt fouldiours, the gaps of that rebellious Pozz thren countrey. Pow put the case that the Is rithe tongue were as facred as the Bebrewe, as learned as the Græke, as fluent as the latin, as amarous as h Italian, as courtious as the Hispanish, as courtelike as b French, yet truely (I know not which way it falleth out) I fee not, but it may be very well spared in the Englishe pale. And if reason will not leade you to thinke it truely experience must force you to graunt it. In olde time when the Romaines were first acquaphted with the Træke tongue, as it is comonly the nature of mā to be delighted with newfangle wares, so he was accompted no gallant among the Romaines, that coulde not prattle & chatte Greeke. Marcus Cicero, father unto Tully, being at that tyme stept in peres, percepuing hys countrevmen to become changelings, in being bylivyle and polmadde, to luck with the Græke the conditions of the Grecians, as to be in wordes talkative, in behaviour light, in condicions quaint, in maners haute, in promifes buffedfalt, in other rall, in bars gaines wanering (which were reckened for Grekish properties in those dayes) the olde gentleman not lo much respecting the neates nesse of the language, as the naughty fruite it brought with it, sayde, that his countrep. men, the Komaynes, resembled the bonde Haucs of Siria. For & more parkit they were in the Greeke, the worle they were in theve maners and lyfe. If this gentleman had bene now living and had fine what alteratio hath happened in Irelad, through the entrecourse of languages, he woulde, I dare fave, breake patience, & woulde demaunde, why the Eng. lithe pale is more given to learne the Frifte, then the Irithman is willing to learne Eng. lithe : we must embrace their language and they detelt oures. One demaunded meryly, they deter oures. Die vemanioed mergy, why O Neale, that last was, would not frame D Aced himselfe to speake English: what: quoth the would merge who would merge when the would merge with the could other, in a rage, thinkest thou, that it standeth icrne & with O Neale his honoz, to wayeth his mouth githe. in clattering Englishe: and pet forsoth we must gagge our iawes in gobbeishing Triff. But I dwelt to long in so apparet a matter. As all the civities and townes in Irelande. woth fingall, the king his lande, Weth the Coutep of Bildare, Louth, Weilford, Speake to this day Englishe (whereby the simplicitie of some is to be derided, that judge the inhabitantes of the Englishe pale, bpon their first reparze to England, to learne their English In three or foure dayes, as though they had bought at Chester a groates worth of Eng. lithe, and so packt up the reast to be carped after them to London) even so in all other plas ces their native language is Irithe.

I finde it solemly advouched, aswel in some of the Irith pamphlets as in Giraldus Cam- Camb. li briense, that Gathelus oz Gaidelus, and after dift.3.rub him Simon Breck denised the Trith language, The for out of all other tongues then ertant in the der of th inoilde. But confidering the course of env terchaunging and blending of speaches togy, ther, not by invention of arte, but by ble of talke, I am rather led to belene (feing Ire, lande was inhabited within one yeare after the deuisson of tongues) that Bastolenus a Bastolen braunche of Japhet, who first leized uppon Arelande, brought thither the same kinde of speache, some of the 72, that to this familie befell at the desolatio of Babell. By the fauth of my body lir, here is finite worth the noting. And now I call to mymbe, that I have red and often heard, that the like benefite bath bene imparted to Areland, tho rough the prayers of S. Patrike the Apolle' of the layd Mand, that is to lay, that Ireland" beweeth no venemous worme. And therupon , percale some are accustomed to say, y there ,, is no poyloned or benemous thing in Irelato, ,, but onely the people, which is taken to have ,, bene land of molt men for their bentithe and sauage maners.

The description of Irelande.

To this layth Ireneus. 3 am done fo binder. frand by the report of divers, falla by Bede, ,, that no poploned or benemous thing is bred ... in that realme, in so much, that the earth of ... v countrep being brought into other realms, ,, killeth all benemous and poploned wormes. But let the matter fall out which way it wil. ,, A afcribe that propertie not to S. Patricke, Judge but to the nature of the sople, because it hath ment, bene knowen long befoze S. Patricke was borne, that Frelande was indued with that property, which is elsewhere easy take foud: Ditherto M. Cope.

In thys discourse (gentle Reader)thou left that M. Cope handleth two principall points, the proprety of Balta and the nature of Ires lande in destroying benemous wormes, the one he ascribeth to b bleffed Aposties Panie, the other he will not in any tople impute to S. Patricke. Touching the first , as & haus no occasion to entermedale therin, in Apir, pole not, for the quarell A hane to the perlon, to dispance bys opinion lo farre as it Man beth with troth. Omnino imterfector, oz as the Vulgar tert is, Vtiq; homicida est homo hic. So that they take him to be but a manquellour, yet M. Cope maketh hym a Paricipe, which is worfe. For although euerpe Paricide be a manquellour, pet è conuerfo, euery manquel lour is not a Paricide. M. Cope procedeth Kirther, Iraci dij, serpetes, qui eum tollerent, immilissent. The Gods ,, being angry fent ferpents to dispatch Paule. And pet for soth, all these serpentes were but one Aiper, as is plainely express in the tert, unlesse M. Cope would teache S. Luke, to tell his tale after the finest fashio, least the Apo-As the Parlon that preached to his Parochis his fermo. ans of the Gospell, wherin mention is made of them that Christ fed in the desert, or wil. dernesse. D, quoth the Parlon, what a Christ that was, that with five barly loaves, & five filhes fed fine hundzed persons. The clarche hearing his mailler to grate overlog on that point, for he dyd often iterate that sentence, fole by to the pulpit, & plucking the person by his gowne, whilpered in his eare y Chaiff fed five thouland. Holde thee contented thou folithe fellow, quoth the Parson, if I thoulos tell mine hearers of fo great a nuber, I holo but discredite the Gospeller, and they woulde not belæue me. So it fareth with M. Cope, belike he miltruffed, that if he had layde, that one Ufper coulde haue flayne Paule, the reader woulde have suspected the untruth of the matter, bycaule it carpeth great likelyhode with it, that one man coulde withstande one Miper, and therefore to faue S. ling, such howling, such gulling, such hutlih, dianchemette, such surfenting, such bomis ting as 3 have fæne some Dermaines doc. In good foth it is knowen, and for my part 3 have from it being beyonde the feas, that in The G their carowing & cup friendly they thea maine ten such kindnelle on their companions, that least their felowes thould millrust them with double oraling, they will not theke to thewe them the botome of their fromaches, a to the ende they should take the better view theref. they will place it now & then in their neigh bours bosome. Thus whe they have cast their gozges, they clay on they? theumde hats, and runne lyke bedient barretoes into the Greetes with their nanco flatchets, and there they hope such a timbying flurre with hackying of frones with hewing of vlockes, with thwitting of focks. with arisyng of Ifalles, with thumpping at deres, that it would make a horse breake his halter, to le lo deonken a pageant. In fine, this qualitie is so naturally engraffed in the greater part of them, that a famous devine vid not licke of late to lay ovenly in his Lece ture that econkennes in that countrey men, was eyther peccatum originale, or accidens inseparabile. I write not this I take Bodio. record, to the reproch or flaunder of that sour trep (beyong lothe to commit the selfe same fault that I reprehend in any other,) but one ly my meaning is to fettle before the Reas der his eyes the absurditie of M. Cope, in fras mong pose Critabolus to flout Ireland, considerping that if he cast his eye homeward, he Mall finde as filthy puddle in his owne come trepas in other realmes. And therfore thys quippe sate as busémely in his mouth, as foz an whose to repschend bitcherp of for an Ma furer to condemne Simonie. For as there is nothping leffe to be tollerated, the for any one to have an other to accompt for his lyfe, that can yelde no accompt of his owne: la there is nothing that ought to mosell by any one from rebuking other nations, then to lee the miloemeanozofhys olone native country. I would withe M. Critabolus of M. Cope, if it thall please him to make by the muster, with indifferency to weigh the estate of Ircland, and so without parciality to frame his indge: ment. Ireland, and especially the ruder part Irelande is not frozed with such learned men as Ger, how it many is. If they had founde preachets, this refor cere livers, that by the embatuming of they? med. carian foules with the sweete and facted flowers of holy wait, would entruct them in the feare of God, in obeying their prince, in ob. scruping the lawes, in biderpropping methe man his vocation the weale publike. I boubt might within the exthe ages M. Critabus lushis begies thould bears fo god a reporte ention the reformation Treland, as it would he reckoned as civillas the helf part of Germany. Let the sople be as fertile and betle as any would with yot if the bulband man wyll, not manureit, some tyme planch and care it, sometynie har ow it, sometime tyll it, sone, tyme marigit fometyme deine it, fometyme big it, and lowe it with good and found cozne, it will brying feath wedes, bynoe corne, cos ble darnelly brambles, bryers, and fondry wylde Amtes. So it fareth with the rude inhabitantes of Tedande, they lacke Cinivertis tics, they wast infrudoes, they are destitute of teachers, they are without preachers, they are denoyag of all such necessaries as appers tayne to the trayning op of youth, and note withstanding all these wanter, if any would be so frowardly set, as to require them, to ble fuch civilitie, as other regions, that are luftis ciently furnished with the lyke belpes , ha might be accounted as bureasonable, as he that would force a cripple that lacketh both his legs to runne, or one to pipe or whilfle a galliard that wanteth hys bpper lippe. But fuch is the rograpt nature of bs woodolings, and me thinketh such vayne humors are not vitcely dayed up in our lage & moatyfied die umes, we are most commonly ginen rather to taunt that which is amille, then to pagle that which is good, and rather we followe the spider in soaking the popson, then in imita, tyng the Be by sucking the hony. For they hold of certaintie, that impos Bernacles are flethe. And if a man fay they difter had eaten a collop of Adam his log, be had eat fen fielh. And pet Abam was uet gugendie of matcle oxfemale, but only exacted of day, as the Bernacles of wood and rottentimbat. But the Triffe clergy oid not to farre frage in their opinion, as Cambrienle and Policiro nicon,inibeir disprofe. For the framing of 3bam Adam and Eue was supt materal, andy down en by Cod, and not by the helpe of Amgeles & by 60 any other creature. For like as it forpateth coate natures course to raise the dead, to lighten of August enlight the blynd, so it stade not with the blue ad inch all and common linage of nature, but onely cat. with the impereminent power of God, to frame a wan of day, & a waman of a mans rib. But the engendzing of Bemacles is no furall, and not to wonderfull as Cambricule makethit. And therfore the examples are not lyke. Pow it thouto feeme that in Cimbriense his tyme-the Frithe clergy builden their ret fon spothes plot. What for the tell, is no

turally begotten or engendred of fieth . Bers ne cles are not naturally engendeed of fleibe. but onely of tymber and wode, Bernacles therfore are not fielh, buleffe you would have them to be woden fleth. And if the reason be lo knit, it may not be diffounded by Cambrienie his crample. As if a man thould argue thus. She that is begotten of any man, muft be of force daughter to that ma. Melcha was begotten of Aran: ergo, Welcha was Arans daughter. This argument is of all partes fo fortified, as it læmeth of all fides to be em: pregnable. Det a buffe brayne Sophiffer cas uilling on the terme (begotte) might fap, that Que was begotten of Adam, and pet the is not Adams daughter. True it is that Adam en and was not Eues father, no moze the Eue was Adames mother, neither by that engending q was there any degree of contanguinitie lyzog betwene them. But because the word (begot: ten) is taken in the argument for the naturall engendzing of man and woman, the instance giue of Eue both not dispance the maior. And for the better baserstanding of the question, it is to be noted that the philosophers diffinguilh animalia fenfitiua, that is leitble liuing thinges, into two lostes, perfea and imper; fed. The perfect are they that are engenized of læde, the unperfect without læde. Those that are naturally engended with lede, can neuer be naturally engendzed without lede. Albest Aucenna very errontoully holdeth v contrary. As for example. Becaule man is naturally engenozed of man and woman, no man may naturally be engendeed without the copulation of man and woma: pet super: naturaily it may be. As Adam was made without man and woman: Euc framed with out woman: Dur Saufour Chill begotten without man. And therfore the Dentil couts not have attainted hym of originall finue. Centracywife, the unperfea may be engens deed without lede by myre, mudde, dung, cas rien, rotten timber og any other thyng, and chiefly by the fecret influence and infillation of the celestiali planets, as the same and such other. As if you put the heire of an house taile, in mire, puddle, oz in a bunghill foz a certaine space, it will turne to a little thin speaulyng worme, which I have often læne and experts mented. And they are termed unperfect, not in respect of their own nature, in which thep are perfect, but in comparison of other sorte of luyng thinges. Amonge this crew mult Bernacles be letted. But here lome will fap: let them be perfect or buperfect. What then? 3 would fapite knowe, whether Cambriense be in an errour, or the Triffe cleangy. Hor his therto I fe nothung, but Cambriense his reas fon disproued. And it is often seene that a found opinion may be weakened by a fæble reason, as we see many sapre garmentes maroe in the making. Tiblin, the beautie and eye of Irelande, Dublinium. hath beine named by Ptolomie, in auncient time, Cblana, Some terme it Dublina, others Dublinia, many write it Dublinum, auctours of better Ckill name it Dublinium. The Iriff call it, Balle er Cleagh, that is, a towne planted byon hurdelles. For the common opinion is, that the plotte, uppon which, the civitie is buylded, hath beine a marithe ground, a fee that by the arte or invention of the first founder, the water could not be vop. ded, he was forced to fasten the quakempre with hurdles, and byon them to buylde the cie tie. I heard of semothat came of buildyng of houses to this foundation: and other holde o, pinion that if a carte of wayne runne with a round and maine pace, through a Brete cale led the high itrate, the houles on eche fide that be percevued to thate. This Citye was builded, oz rather the buildings therof enlars ged, about the years of our Lord. 15. For as bout this tome there arrived in Ireland theé noble Casterlings that were breihren, Auellanus, Sitaracus, and Yuorus. Auellanus beng Auellan the eldest brother, butloco Dublin, Sitaracus the fear Materforde, and Yuorus Limmerick. Of the of Dub founder Auellanus, Dublin was named Auel- Quella lana, and after by corruption of speache Ebla. Eblan na. This Citie, as it is not in antiquitie in feriour to any citie in Irclande, fompleas faunt lituation, in gozgeous buildings, in the multitude of people, in martiall chivalrie, in obedience and loyaltie, in the aboundannce of wealth, in largenes of hospitalitie, in maners and civilitie it is superiour to all other Cp. ties and townes in that realme. And therfore Dublin it is commonly called the Triffe or young Lo, the in don. The leate of this citie is of all sides London pleasant, comfortable, and wholsome. If you know would traverse hils, they are not farre of. If Dubly champion ground it lyeth of all partes, if you be oclited with freshwater, the famous river called the Liffie, named of Prolome Lybni-Chel. um, runneth fast by. In of Dubi which yeare John Kran and Robert Jans, two worthipfull gentlemen, were colleages in that office, and therof they are named the last Bailiss and first Shirises, that have bene in Dublin. It appeareth by the aunciet feale of thus Citie, called Signum præpolituræ, Dublyn that this Citie haue beene in olde tyme go gouend uerned by a 1920uoff.

In the yere 1189. there ranged thie robbers and outlawes in England, among which Ko. bert hove and little John were chiefetaines, of all thefes doubtleffe the most courteous. Robert hode beyng betrayed at a Ponry in Scotland, called Bricklies, the remnaunt of the crue was leattered, and every man fozced to thift for himselfe. Witherupo little John was fayne to fie the realme, by fayling into Arcland, u here he lotourned for a few daves at Dubline. The citizens beyng done to bre berstand, the wandering outcast to be an er. ceilent archer, requested hym hartily to trie how far he could hote at randone. Tho pel dona to their behelf, finde on the bridge of Dublin, and thotte to that mole bill, leaupng behande him a monument, rather by his no. feritie to be wondered, then possibly by any man liuping to be counterfcozed. But as the repayze of so notozious a champion, to any countrep, would some be published, so his a, bode could not be long concealed; and there, fore to eschew the daunger of lawes, he fled into Scotland, where he dyed at a towne of Little Aillage called Pozany. Gerardus Mercator, Iohndom in his Colmographye affirmeth, that in the cealed. same towne the bones of an huge and mighty man are kept, which was called little John. amog which bones, b buckle bone or bipbone inas of such largenesse, as witnesseth Hector Boethius, ý he thaust his arme through bhole therof. And the same bone berng sated to the other partes of his body, did argue the man to have bene 14. fote long, which was a prety length for a little John. For in god foth the townesmen, and namely fifth, bentes are pregnant in conceining, quicke in takpng, and fure in keppng. The citizens are very hedy and wary in all their publique affairs, flow in determining matters of weight, louing to loke ere they leave. In choling their magifrate, they respect not onely his riches, but also they weigh his experience. And therfore they elea for their Paior neyther a riche man that is young, not an olde man that is poze. They are cherefull in the entertayne, ment of fraungers, hartye one to an other, nothing given to factions. They love no tole benchewhistlers, noz luskishe faytoures, foz yong and old are wholy addiced to theining, the men commonly to traffike, the women to fpinnyng and carding. lowest paper he could. As the Werchaunt and he Awde dodging one with the other in cheas ping the ware, the hostman confidering that he was well mounted, and that the merchant and he had growen to a payce, made wyle as though he woulde have drawen to his purse, to have defraged the money. The cloth in the meane whyle being tuckte by and placed before him, he gave the spurre to his borse and ranne away with the cloth being not imbard from his posting pale, by reason the towne was not perclosed epther with ditch of wall. The townes men being pincht at the heart, that one rascall in such scozneful wyse thould give them the flampame, not so much weigh: ing the sclendernesse of the losse, as the shame fulnesse of the fople, they put their heades tos aither, consulting how to prevent eyther the sodaine rushing of the posthast sying of any such adventerous rakehell hereafter.

An which consultation a famous Dido, a chaste involve, a politicke dame, a bountifull gentlewoman, called Kole, who repres centing in sinceritie of lyfe the sweetnesse of that herbe, whose name she bare, bufolded the device, howe any such future mischaunce Choulde be prevented, and withall opened hir roffers liberally, to have it furthered: Two awdw20perties in a countaplour. Hir deuile was; that the towns thoulde incontinently be inclosed with walles, and there wythall promised to discharge the charges , so that they would not Aicke to finde out labourers. The denile of this worthie Watrone being wpse, and the offer liverall, the townes men agreed to follow the one, and to put their hele ping handes to the atchieuing of the other.

The morise was begunne, which through the multitude of handes læmed light. For the whole towne was allembled, tagge & ragge, cutte and long taple: none exempted but such as were bedzed timpotent. Some were talked to delue, others appointed w mattockes to diage, divers allotted to the buheaping of rubbithe, many bestowed to the carpage of frenes; sunder occurred in lepering of moze ter, the better forte busied in oversking the workemen, cehe one according to hys bocation employed, as though the civitie of Care thage were a frelly in buylding, as it is feat lye verified by the golden Poet Virgil, and nestelp Engliffed by D. Doctour Phaer.

The Moores with courage went to worke some vnder burdens grones : Some at the walles and towers with bandes were tumbling up the stones. Some measured out a place to buylde their mansion house within:

Some lawes and officers to make in Parliment dyd begin. An other an hauen bad caft, and deepe they trenche the grounde. Some other for the games and playes a stately place bad founde. And pyllers great they cut for kings, to garnish forth their walles. And lyke as Bees among the flowers. when fresh the sommer falles, In shine of sunne apply their worke. when growne is vp their yong: Or when their hines they ginne to Hoppe, and hony sweete is sprong. That all their caues and cellers close with dulcet liquour filles, Some doth outlade, some other bringes the stuffe with ready willes. Sometime they ionne, and all at once doe from their mangers fet The flouthfull drones, that woulde confume, and nought woulde doe, to get. The worke it heates, the bony smelles of flowers and time ywet.

But to returne from Dido of Carthage.to Kole of Kolle, and hir worke, the laboures were so many, the worke, by reason of round and erchequer payment, so well applied the quary of fapze marble to neere at hand. (For they afterme, that out of the trenches and dit. thes hard by their ramppers, the frones were had and all that plot is to Conp that the four dation is an harde rocke) that thele Walles with divers beane turrettes were consinly mounted, and in maner coner finished, then to the Irithe enemies notified. Which pe wille was no small corifie to them. These walles in circuit are equal to Londo walles. It hath three gorgious gates, Michoppe his gate, on the Gall fide : Allegate, on the Call foutheast lide : And South gate, on the fouth parte. This towne was no more fautonies for these walles, then for a notable wonders batoge that Aretched from the talone to the otherlide of the water, which must have beine by reasonable survey rt. score, if not more. Divers of the poales, logges & fakes, infi which the bridge was underpropt, sicke to this dape in the water. A man wonde bets suppose, that so slowishing a towne formely buylded, so substantially walled, fo mell peor pled, so plenteausly with thapfife artificers fozed, woulde not have fallen to any loosing decay. But as the fecret & depe int gements of God are briled within the constinue of his ward divine Paicifie, so it standeth not with the dulnelle of man his wit, to beate his havnes in the curious enfearching of histen mille

Wherefore I, as an hyltorian bidertas king in this Treatile, rather plainely to be clare, what was done, then rathly to inquize, why it Moulde be done: purpole, by God his allitaunce, to accomplith, as nere as I can, mp ductie in the one, leaving the other to the frivolous deciding of bulie heads. This Role, who was the foundzelle of thele former res hearled walles, had iffue the fonnes, (how: beit some holde opinion, that they were but hir pephewes) inho beyng bolifered out through the wealth of their mother, and supported by their trafficke, made divers profper rous voyages into forraine countreys. But as one of the three chapmen was imployed in his trafficke abzoade, so the prettie popelet his twyfe began to be a freshe occupping gig. lotte at home, and by report fell so farre acquainted byth a religious clopiterer of the towne, as that he gate wythin the lyning of hyz smocke. Bothe the partyes wallowing overlong in the ffincking puddle of adulterie, suspicion beganne to cræpe in fome tolones mens braines, and to be briefe, it came so fagre, through the full indgement of God, tolight, whether it were, that he: was with childe in hir hulbande his ablence, of that his loner pled his fondly in open weer fence, as the prefumption was not onely bes hement, but also the factor to apparent. Dit bufoztunat bulband had not somer notice greuen him opon his returne of these sozowfull newes, then his fingers began to nibble, bys teth to grinne bys eyes to trickle, his eares. to dindle, his heade to desell, in formuch as his heart being theared with taloutie, & his wits encialde through Abrenche, he became as madde, as a marche hare. But howe heartly loeuer hir bulbande toke it. Wame Kofe and all hir friendes (which were in effect all the townes mensifoz that the was their common benefactelle) were galoe at their hearts, ale well to heare of the enormyous aduontrie, as to fee the bedien panges of brainficke falous lie. Whereboon divers of the townes menne grunting and grudging at the matter, laybe that the fact was horrible and that it were at dede of charitie bitterly to grubbe away fuch wilde thrubbes from the towns: and if thes were in any dispunishable tople rakte by in the allies, they houlde not knner traverse the seas, their some other moulde enkendle the like fire a freshe, and so consequently dife. honest their suples, and make their husbands. to become changelinges as being turnoe fro lober mode to be homewooshecause rutting: wrues make often rammiche hulbandes, as: our pronerbe doethinferre. Donatus of some called Bungus succeeded Patricious & likewyse consecrated by Lanfrancus Archbishoppe of Canterbury, at the instaunce of Terdinacus king of Irelande, the bishoppes of Irelande, the cleargie & the Citizens of Dublyn, he deceased in the yeare 1095. Samuel succeeded Donatus, and dyed in the yeare 1122. Gregozius dyd not succeede immediately after Samuel for there be thirtie yeares betweene them both. This Gregorius was the first Hetrapolitan of Dublyne and was consecrated Archbishop in the yeare 1152. And dyed in the yeare 1162.

S. Laurentius Dthothille. This Pzelate was first Abbot of S. Kenins in Gimoelagh, and after he was solemnely consecrated and installed in Christchurch at Dublyne by Gelacius the Primas of Armach, and not by Canterbury as the Bishoppes of Dublyne were before the pall given them. He dyed in Pormandle, and was buryed in our Ladge churche of Angy in the yeare 1180, the fourtiene of Povember.

Johanne Commin, an Englishman successor Laurence. This famous Piclate being clopffered by in the Abbeye of Cusham in Wiscolfershyze was highly renowmed of all menas well for his oxpelearning, as for the integritie of his lyfe. The cleargie of Subspice a clareke became huble peticioners to the king his materie, Henry the seconde, that through his meanes such an unusluable teinell shoulde be installed in Laurence hys dignitie. The king bowing to their earnest suite agreed, he shoulde be consecrated their Archbishop. Which was an happy houre for that countrey. For besides the great trausile he endured in edifying his flocke in Chiffian religion, he was founder of S. Patricke hys churche in Dublyne, as is before specified. He deceased in the yere 1212, and was entumbed in the choare of Chisschurch.

Henry Londzes luccaded Commin. This man was nicknamed Scozchebyll, 02 Sco2, chevillenn, through this occasion. Being fet. led in his le he gave comandement to all his tenauntes to make their apparaunce before him at a day appointed, and for that he was rawe as pet in his revenues, he toke it to stande best with their ease and quietnesse_and his comoditie, that eche of them fhould flien their euidences, whereby he might learne, by what tenure they helde of him. His tennants milituiting no luttilh dealing, but contrains all to be ment for the belt-delineted their ent dences to their Lande lorde, who dod frantly well perule them, when he flung them all in the fire. The poze tensuntes elpping this subtyll prancke to be verye unfitting for a Bithoppe, coulde not bridle their tonges, but brake out on a sodayne: Thouan Archeby. thop : Pay, thou art a Scozchevilleyn. But Emich it could not be gueshed to what ende this fac. of his tended, for notivithisanding this, the tenants enjoyed their landes, butelle he did it bycause they should be but tenamites at will, and to trande to his denotion. This prelate boubtlesse was politicke & well lettered, and for his impledome and learning he was elected L. Inffice of Irelande. He was the four der of the castle of Dubline as is before men tioned. Thus in effeire hane the Frill meiters report repgne before the Angroles spint of Gurmond, ted of Turgelius a Noiwegian, whether he bid or whether that her cause threises as some tenaunt to him, whiche if it thoulor bee true, no doubte the same Gurmonde was some Kyng of the Wanes, or Porweygians, and not of the Afficances; (as some of our countreymen nance bym.) Which errour is lone committed. in takying one heathenithe nation for an other, as those have done that have named the Hungarians (when they invaded Gallia befoze they were Christians) Sarazins: And to lykewyle might that authour (who to ever he was) whom to Geffrey of Monmouth foloweth, fynning Gurmonde written to be a king of the mplcreantes, millake the Porwegians for Affricanes, bicaule both those nations were Instorts: and therefore lith haply the Affricancs in the dayes when that Author Lyued, bare al the brute aboue other heathenithe nations then, as the Turkes do nowe, he named them Africanes.

Howe wener it was, certagne it is, that the Danes of Porwegians made lundite inualions 20 lee Regions Denmarke, Rofwey, and Swe-Abachus Into Irelande, and that at feuerall tymes. But tor Turgelius, whether hee were an absolute Byng, of but a Lieutenant of some armye, buber some other king named Gurmonde, og peraduenture Gozmo, (as luche names are lone cogrupted,) I can not affirme, bycaule that no certagne tyme is lette votone in the Chroni= cles, whyche are written of those Pations, whereby they mave bee so reconciled together, as luffileth to warrant any lykely conichure in 30 walles, that it wold be an hard matter to wome this behalfe.

But if I thouloe lage, (with the Readers licence) what I thinke, this Gurmonde what lo euer he was, made no luche conquelt of Fretande not of this our Ale of Bittayn (as by Come witters is supposed: but yet myght he peraduenture lande in colairs, and exther in fauoure of the Barons, then enimyes to the Butons, of in hatred of the Chailtian name, perfecute by cruell

But lith we are entred to speake thus lane of the Porwegians , heere by the wave I have thoughte it not impertmente to the purpole of thes Trithe hillogie to write what wer fome recorded in the Chronicles of those northernden, weitten by Saro Grammaticus, Albertus Crants, and others, concernying the fun-Dry inuations made by the Danes, Porwrydmis of Pormans, (whether we lyft to cal them) into Irelande.

The Lozde Thomas, fonne to the Earle of Ellster departed this life.

And on the Sunday next after y Patiuitie of our Lady, & Lord John Kitz Thomas deceasien at Larach Brine necre to Maynoth, & was bu = 10 ried at Kildare, in the Church of & Friers Preachers. This John Kitz Thomas, a little before his deathe, was created Earle of Kildare, after whome succeeded his sonne Thomas Fitz John a right wife and prudent personage.

The fourteenth of September, Conhoz Bac= kele, and flue hundzed Friffinen were flagne by the Lord William de Burgh, and Lord Richard Birmingham in Connagh. Also on & Monday after the feast of all Saintes, John Loggan and 20 gote bp in armour, and raunging through the Sir hugh Billet flewe a great nüber of Scots. among the whiche were, 100, with double are mourg, and. 200. with finale armours: so that of their men of armes, there over three hundred belide fotemen. 47

The fifteenth of Poucmber chanced a migh-A great repett. ty tempett of wynde and rayne, whiche that we downe many houses, with the Steeple of the Trinitie Church in Dublin, and vid much other hust both by land and water.

> The fifth of December, Sir Mane Stewarde that had bin taken prisoner in Alster by John Loggan, and Sir John Sandale, was brought to the Castell of Dublin.

After Candlemas, the Lacies came to Due blin, and procured an inquest to be impanelled to inquire of their demeanor, for that they were acculed to have procured the Scottes to come into Arclande: but by that inquelt they were diffharged, and there with toke an oth to keepe the kings 40 where he lay in a wood, and loll many of his men peace, and to delirop the Scots to the uttermost of there vower.

In the beginning of Lent, the Scottes came in ferret wife buto Slane, with twette thousand armed me:and with them came the army of Mls Her, destroying all the countrey before them.

Mozcouer, on Monday befoze the Fealt of S. Mathias the Apollle, the Earle of Allier lying in the Abbey of Sainte Mary neere to Dublin, Robert Potingham Maire of that Citic, with 50 Earle binder fafekeping within y Callell of Dis. The Earle of the communaltie of the same went thither, twee blin, acculing him of certains riots committee for Victor deliuses. Act of Dublin, Acw. vif. of his men, and hoyled the Ibber.

The same werke, Edwarde Bruce marched towardes Dublin, but herewith, turning to the Callell of Cnocke, he entreb the lame, and toke hugh Typical the Lorde thereof, togither with his wife, and raunfommed them for a fumme of monep. The Citizens of Dublin brent all they? suburbes for feare of a liege, and made the belt purneyance they coulde to defende their Citte, if the Bruce had come to have belieged them : but he turning another way, went unto the towne of Paas, and was guided thither by the Lacies, cotrary to their othe.

From thence, he palled buto Triffelbermot, and to to Baliganam, and to Callan, at length he came to Lymerike, and there remayned till after Cafter.

They of Aller lent to the Lorde Julice lamentable informations of fuche crueltie as the e= ninues practifed in those partes, belieching hym to take forme ogder for their reliefe in that they? to miserable estate. The Lozde Justice deliucred to The Kings them the Kings power with his standard, where- flanderd deliwith under pretence to expell the Scottes, they wered to them countrep, did more bere and molest the subjectes, than did the strangers. The Scots proceeded and spoyled Cassocia, and wheresocuer they lyghte bpon the Butlers lands, they brente and spoyled them bumercifully.

In this meane while, had the Logo Juftice, and Thomas fity John Carle of Kiloare, Ris chard de Clare, and Arnold le Power, Baron of Donnoill, levich an armie of thirtie thousande 30 ment, readie to goe againste the enimies, and to gine them battaple, but no god was bone, for about the same time, the Lozd Roger Postimer Roger Mortiwas lent into Irelande as Lotd Jullice, and la mer jultice of ding at Poghall, wrote his letters onto the Lozd Irelande. Kildare purluing Damond to the Chapiter house doze, undertake on his honoz, that hee Mould recepue no villanie. Wherebpon, the recluse craning his Lordships hand to affure hym his life, there was a clift in the Chapiter house doze, pierced at a trice, to the end both the Erles Mould have Chaken hands, and bee reconciled.

But Demond furmifing that this drift was entended for some further treacherie, that if hee 10 care. woulde stretche out his hande, it had bin percale chopt off, refused that proffer, butill Kildare tretcht in his hand to him, and to the doze was opened, they both embraced, the storme appeas fed, and all their quarrels for that prefente, rather discontinued than ended.

In this garbooks, one of the Citizens, furnas med Blanchfield, was flayne.

This later quarrell beeping lyke a greene cured, in that Kildare fulpeded, that lo greate an army (which the other alledged, to be brought for the guarde of his person) to have bin of purpole affembled, to outface hom and his power in his owne Countrey: and Damonde mifrusted, b this treacherous practile of the Dublinians, was by Kildare deuised. These and the like furmises lightly by both the noble men misdeemed, and by the continuall twatling of flyring clawbackes in their eares whilpered, beed 30 nouche agaynfte bym the trouth of that article, and fostered a malice betwirte them and they? posteritie, many yeares incurable, which caused muche flurre and buquietnesse in the Realme, butill the confusion of the one house, and the noneage of the other, ended and buryed they? mutuall quarrels.

Damond was nothing inferioure to the other in flomacke, and in reach of policy, farre be-enimics sterne, to the Irille such a scourge, that rather for defpite of him, than for fauoure of a= npe parte, they relped for a tyme to Dimond, came buder bys protection, served at hys call, performed by startes (as they? manner is) the ruetie of god lubients.

Demonde was lecrete, and of great forecalt, very stayed in speech, daungerous of every trifle that touched his reputation.

While the Lord Lieutenante sate at dynner in the Caltle of Dublin, her hearde newes that in Rebellion. the Mozes with a mayne army were even at the entrie of the bordures, readye to inuade the Englist vale.

Annuediately menne were leuved by John Fitz Simons, then Maioz of Dublin, and the nexte morrowe loyning them to his bande, the Licutenant marched towardes the Frontiers of 40 ams and Bedlowe of the Roche, were fayne to Bedlowe.

The Mozes uppon the Lieutenant hys auproche, senered themselves into sundry companics, and biderstanding that the carriage was dragging after the army, and flenderly maned, certague of them charged the Lieutenante bys fernauntes, and suche of the Citizens as were appoputed to quarde the carriage.

Patricke Fitz Simons, a ftrong flurdy yon= ker kept the enimies such tacke, as he seased part 50 of them away, rescued the carriage, slewe two of the Rebelles, and broughte their heads worth him to mailfer Maioz his tent.

The next morning, two of the Lieutenaunte his men, that flunkenway from Fitz Simons. thinking that the carriage had bin loft, aduertiled their Lozde, that fits Simons fledde a= way, and the Mores were to many in companie, as it had bin but folly for two to bicker with fo great a number.

The Licutenante polico in a rage to the Maior his pauilion, telling hym, that his man Fitz Simons was a cowardly Traptoz in runing away when her houlde have defended the carriage.

What am I, my Lozd, quoth Patricke fitz Simons, lkipping in his Wirt out of the tente. with both the heads in his hand. My Lorde, I am no cowarde. I flode to my tacklings, when your men gaue me the Cippe, I rescued the carriage, and have beere sufficiente tokens of my manhode, tumbling downe both the heads. Sailt thou fo fitz Simons quoth the Licute. nant? I crie thee mercie, and by this Beorge, I A valiant wish woulde to God it had bin my god hap, to have bin in thy companie in that skirmist. So drinking to fitz Simons in a bolle of wine, and 20 honorably rewarding him for his god feruice. he returned to his paulio, where having knows ledge of Omoze his recule, he pursued him with a trouve of horsemen.

The Lieutenant thus palling forward, was The Earle of cloved by a gunner of Dmozes, who lodged Surrey in close in a woode side, and watching hys time, daunger to hee discharged his peece at the verye face of the haue bin slain. Lieutenante, strake the viscr off bys belmet, and vierced no further as God would.

This did he (retchlesse in manner what became of himfelfe, to hee might amaze the armye for a time) and furely hereby he brake the fwiltnes of their following, and advantaged the flight of his Captaine, which thing hee wanne with the price of his owne bloud. For the Souldyers would no further, till they hadde ranfackt all the nokes of thys woode, verily suspecting fome ambush thereabout, and in several knottes ferretted out thes gunner, whome fitz Williams mangle and hew in preces, by cause the wretche would neuer prelde.

In the meane whyle, defpance was proclays med with Fraunce and Scotlande both at once, whichemoused the Kyng to call home for home. Surrey out of Frelande, that hee myghte employ hym in those warres. Hys prowelle, integritie, good nature, and courle of gouernement, the Countrey muche commended.

mailter the king hath beene of his gracious incle. nation affeded to the Carle of Kildare, (his backt . friende being by his just desert from his Maiestie, weeded) the credit wherein this noble man at this, present resteth, manifest ly declareth. Wherefore it. resteth, that you thanke God and the King for bis, safe arrivall. As for his welcome, mailler Beblies, your electfull countenaunces, your willing, meetings, your folemne Processions, ove fo ferre, Geweit, as you minister mee occasion on hys, Lozothip his behalf, rather to thanke you for your, courteffe, than to exhort you to any further cere-, monic.

Hauing ended his Dration, they road all into the Citic, where Mozelpe after the Carte of Mazie surrendzed the swozde to sir William Skeffington.

During the time that Bildare was in Eng. lande, the fept of the Twies making his ablence their harnest, ceased not to molest and spoyle his tenants, and therefore the Carle meaning not to was up to lightly their manifold inturies, was determined presently byon his arrivall to crie the quittance: to the spedinesse of which fernice he re= quested the aide of the Citizens of Dublyn: and 10 expeding in Chaiftes Church their anfwere touching thys motion, the Maior and his breethren promised to allost him with two C. Archers.

The late come Billiop of Weth being then prefent, moued quellion, whether the Citizens were pardoned, for crowning Lambert contrarie to they? ductic of allegeance, and if they were not pardoned, be thought they might advantage the king thereby. Whereat one of their lagelt and expertest Aldermen, named John Kit3 Simons, 20 being therein the deeper drenched, bycause that stept forth and sapte:

Ny Lorde of Meth, may I be fo bolde as to e crane what Countrey man you are? Mary fir . round fall he caught in his owne turne. In the fcconde yeare of Skeffington bis gouernment, it happened that one Henrie Wihite, pitching of a Cart of hay in the high Arcete, and baving offred boyes play to passengers that walked to and fro , he let a bottle of his hay fall on a fouldiers Bonet, as he palt by his Cart: the fouldiour taking this knauiste knacke in dudgeon, hurled his Dagger at him, and having narowly milt the princocks, he flicked it in a post not farce off. Wibite leapt downe from the Cart, and thaust the souldiour through the shoulder wyth in the Citie, betweine the Souldiours and the apprentifes, infomuch as Thomas Barby beyng the Maior, hauing the King his fworde dawne, was hardly able to appeale the fray, in which byuerfe were wounded, and none Caine.

The Lorde Deputic illued out of the Callel, and came as farre as the Pyllogic, to whome the Maior polico through the preale with the fworde naked bnder his arme, and presented White that mas & brewer of all this garboyl to his Lordhip, whom the Governour pardonco, as well for hys courage in bickering, as for his retebles amplicity and pleasanmesse in telling the whole discourse. all berby a man may fee how many bloudie quarels, a brawling fwalhbuckler may pyke out of a bottle of bay, namely when his braynes are forebitten with a bottle of nappie Ale.

About this time ther was a great flurre reised in Englad, about the king his divozle, who thinking it expedient in so fickle a worlde to haue a fure post in Irelande, made Kildare Logde Deputie, Crommer, the Primate of Armach, Lorde Chancellour, and fir James Butler Logo Treas Butler. sozer.

Skeffington suppoling, that he was put belide the quistion by the secrete canualling of Kilvare bisfriendes, concepued thereof a great icaloufle, Kildare bauing recepued the fwozde, woulde permit Skeffington, who was late gouernour, now like a meane prinate perlon, to daunce aftendance among other fuiters in his house at Dublyn, named the Carbyy.

Skeffington playing thus on the bit, Moztly after fayled into England, vpon whole departure the Lorde Deputie fummoned a Parliament at Dublin, where there paft an Aff agaynft leagers we are no traytozs, bycause it was the Carle of 30 of corne: Item, for the buiting and appropria tion of the personage of Baltrim, to the Pziozie of Saint Peters by Trim.

In the Parliament tyme , Dneale on a lo-Daine inuaded the Countrey of Wriell, rylling and spoyling the king his subicits, at which tyme allo was the Carle of Difozie greatly bered by the Biraldines, by reason of the olde quarelles of either side a fresh renined.

The next yeare, the Lorde Deputie going a. servant to Benet a Marchant of Dublyn, was 40 gaynst Dearroule, was pitisully burt in the side, with a Gunne at the Castell of Byzre, so that he neuer after enioped his lymmes, noz deliuered his wordes in goo plight, otherwile like ynough to have bene longer fozbozne, in confideration of his many noble qualities, great god fernices, and the state of those tymes.

Streight wayes complayates were addzelled to the king of thele enormities, and that in most . beynous maner that could be deupled, boulting bys pyke. Wherebpon there was a great bpzoze so out his voings as it were to the least brake of Co. nister furnises, turning enerie pziusteiniurieto be the king his quarell, and making enerie Bubdings pricke as huge in thewe as Samplom bys Piller. Thus he spake for his last farewell with trice kling teares, and having ended, be flode, embraced the Counsaile, committed them to God, and immediately after be was embarked.

But although with his grave exhortation the frozen heartes of his adversaries for a thort wirt thawed, yet notwithstanding they turned some after all this gay Gloria patri, to a further fetche. faying that this was nothing else but to pazell their eyes with some jugling knacke, to the ende they Moulde advertise the king of his loyall speeches, adding further, that he was to to enill, that fed treasons, they layde to his charge, with further furmiles, they certified the counsaile of Engs lande, that the Erle befoze his departure, furnis flicd his owne wiles and forces with the King his Artilleric and Munition taken forth of the Callel of Dublin.

This Earle was a goody and personable noble man, full of bonour, which was not ones ly lodged in wardly in his mynde, but also bee bare it outwardly in countenaunce. As franke and as liberall as his calling required. A deepe and a farre reaching bead. In a good quarell ra= ther flout than flubborne, bearing himselfe with no leffe courage, when he relifted, than with hos nourable discretion, where he vecibed. A fanous rer of peace, no furtherer of waire, as one that to perour his warres; came to take his repair with preferred bulamfall quietnelle before buriout froubles, beeing not with flanding of as greate wiscome in the one, as of valour in the other. In earnest and a scalous ophologr of his countrep, in all attemptes rather respeding the publique weale, than his prinate gaine. Whereby he bounde his Countrey fo greatlye unto him; that Arclande might with good cause wish, that epther he had neuer beene borne, or elle that hee rad neuer deceassed, so it were lawfull to crave 20 bysause an unbidden quest knowethnot where him to bee immortall, that by course of nature was framed mortall. Ind to gine fufficient proufe of the entyze affection be bare his Counfrep, and of the zealous care he did cast thereon. he betwee in his death bed his foule to God his earkaffe to Christian buriall, and his beart to his Countrep, verlaring thereby, that where his minde to as letted in his life, his heart Coulde be Mersentombed after his death. Collich was according to his will accomplished. For his heartize the companie, be licenced Power, if be woulder was conveyed to Irclande, and lyeth engrauch inthe Choie of the Cathediall Church in Kilkennie.
